NEWS:

Extraordinary things are unfolding now at a record pace and this show will cover them. These should be looked upon as important markers in our story. The changes in thinking and thoughts are extraordinary, as is the scope and depth of it. After the resignation of the Bulgarian PM in the beginning of this month, came after 9 months of a ridiculous coalition. Bulgaria faces a strong possibility for new early elections. Prior to these last 9 months, they had 2 years during in which 3 parliamentary early elections were held.

But it is not the only merry go round, as Leo Varadkar stepped down as Irish prime minister and Fine Gael leader. Announcing his resignation, Varadkar described leading his country as the most fulfilling time of my life. Yes what he was full filling (two words) was his bank account, as he did absolutely nothing for the Irish people. His resignation came just a few days after meeting Joe Biden in the White House. Was he threatened? I presume he is leveraged and so maybe they leant on him over asking for a ceasefire in Gaza? A sea of change in Ireland it seems, good I say.

Major events going on in Africa now as well as Russia. With S. Africa going against Israel, now another country in Africa is making a great move against Israel's puppet nation, Niger. The American presence in the Republic of Niger is illegal, they declared. Niger has suspended all its military agreements with the U.S., including operations of a major U.S. military airbase, a major blow to U.S. power in Africa. It was signed into law on March 16th 2024. Hopefully other countries will remove the US military from their soil and we will see an end to the 900 bases of the US, not America has worldwide. The savings of this should then be returned to the people, who paid for it. Is this another example of the effect of the Blueprint or even the outing of the US bases in FHSTOS Plus 19? Even if not, it is nice to see positive changes.

A lot of mercenaries are being taken out in Ukraine in the back drop of the cleansing of that country. Here is a list of the mercenaries and their death count Country by Country: UK 360 dead out of 822. Sweden 25 dead out of 53. USA 491 dead out of 1113. Canada 422 dead out of 1005. Poland 1497 dead out of 2900. France 147 dead out of 356. Germany 55 dead out of 235. Georgia 561 dead out of 1042. Rumor has it, most of the snipers removing these mercenaries are not Russian, but Georgian. Seems like there is a cleanup going on to me, as mercenaries take out other mercenaries for the highest shekels. Prior to 2018 I had never knowingly met a hired killer, then due to the work with the Trustee I met two. I wondered just what makes people be that way, more than likely the programs, but you also have to have a whole new psyche to carry that work out. I guess having no empathy is the first remit and a total lack of humanity, plus a greed for the shekels. Not a good combination to have. As for those who lost their lives, I guess if you live by the sword, you eventually die by it as well.

The Supreme Court has allowed Texas to enforce one of the toughest immigration laws enacted by any US state in recent memory. The measure allows police to arrest and prosecute those suspected of illegally crossing the US-Mexican border. The Biden administration has challenged the law, calling it unconstitutional. Which is ironic since the whole of the US Government is unconstitutional. Crossing the US border illegally is already a federal crime, but violations are usually handled as civil cases by the immigration court system. One reason the Texas law, SB4, is so controversial is because courts have previously ruled that only the federal government can enforce the country's immigration laws, not individual US states. SB4 gives local and state police officers the ability to stop and arrest anyone suspected of having crossed the border illegally, except in schools, healthcare facilities and places of worship. Punishments would range from misdemeanors to felonies and potential imprisonment, or fines of up to $2,000, Penalties for those who illegally re-enter Texas after having been deported could go up to 20 years in prison, depending on a person's immigration and criminal history. Top Mexico diplomat Roberto Velasco Álvarez posted on X that Mexico will not accept migrants being sent back across the border by the state of Texas. The dialogue on immigration matters will continue between the federal governments of Mexico and the US, he wrote in Spanish. Which tells you Mexico is promoting this kind of behavior. Mexico needs to focus upon improving their country, so that people will not have to travel to America for jobs. They need to clean up their historic crimes, gangland issues and trafficking and maybe the Mexican people would be willing to stay. Or is this an elaborate elite based scheme to crash America and Mexico? Because if Mexico keeps siphoning people, there will be no economy left. Sounds like an ouroboros program to me.

Here is another state fighting back against the system as well. Well we never thought this would ever happen as this program has been a consistent staple in the Alt Media since the 1990's. But things are changing now and it is pleasing to see it is being recognized as a problem. The Tennessee State Senate has taken a definitive stance against the controversial topic of chemtrails by passing SB 2691/HB 2063. The bill, which aims to ban the intentional release of chemicals into the atmosphere for geoengineering purposes, was sponsored by Representative Monty Fritts (R-Kingston) and Senator Steve Southerland (R-Morristown) and won approval in the Senate. The legislation is predicated on the claim that, it is documented the federal government or other entities acting on the federal government's behalf or at the federal government's request may conduct geoengineering experiments by intentionally dispersing chemicals into the atmosphere, and those activities may occur within the State of Tennessee. This new bill seeks to outlaw any such activities, stating that, The intentional injection, release, or dispersion, by any means, of chemicals, chemical compounds, substances, or apparatus within the borders of this state into the atmosphere with the express purpose of affecting temperature, weather, or the intensity of the sunlight is prohibited. The passage of this bill marks a significant development in the ongoing debate over geoengineering and environmental manipulation. Proponents of the bill believe that it is a necessary step to safeguard the environment and public health from unregulated geoengineering practices. The legislation is set to be enforced beginning July 1, 2024, indicating the urgency that the Tennessee Senate places on this issue for the public welfare. This is another victory for those who were labeled conspiracy theorists and I hope it now encourages over states to ban it as well.

Here is another attack on the big tech companies. The United States Justice Department is gearing up to file a significant lawsuit against Apple, alleging violations of antitrust laws, a move that comes after a protracted investigation into the tech giant's business practices. The lawsuit, anticipated to be announced by Attorney General Merrick Garland and other top DOJ officials, is set to address a range of concerns surrounding Apple's conduct in the technology and digital markets. In my opinion these big tech giants needs to be broken up and install pre-vetted people and entrepreneurs to share the market, not corner it.

The House passed a bill that would require TikTok's Chinese parent company, ByteDance, to sell it within 180 days or risk TikTok being banned from U.S. app stores and web hosting services. The concern from lawmakers stems from ByteDance's connection with the Chinese government, which could reportedly demand access to U.S. TikTok users' data. TikTok has around 170 million monthly users in the U.S. alone. There are a number of government officials with closer connections to the Chinese government and rogue elements, like Pelosi. Why is that not a threat? All very duplicitous is it not? Are we seeing the beginning of the end for another program that has destroyed many lives and livelihoods? The House of Representatives voted late Monday to rescind over $70 billion to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in the first bill under the 118th Congress. After passing this bill, the Republicans then put forward another bill to abolish the IRS and eliminate income taxes. The Blueprint in action again? Also it was reported: House Republicans are expected as soon as Tuesday to launch the Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government. The panel is expected to seek to illuminate what some Republicans say have been efforts by the Biden administration to influence content hosted by companies, such as Facebook parent Meta Platforms Inc. and Alphabet Inc., owner of YouTube and Google. Is that the Blueprint in action as well?

ISRAELI NEWS:

Breitbart News is often touted in the Alt Media as a voice for the people, but this article recently highlights that they along with many others are apologists for the Israeli junta. As the National Security Advisor Jake Sullivan made the antisemitic claim Monday in a White House press briefing that Israel interferes in U.S. politics. He provided no evidence of his claim, while admitting that it had nothing to do with the question he had been asked, about policy differences between the U.S. and Israel in the ongoing war against Hamas. Funny they ask for claims of this nature, yet many of the same so-called journalists never ask the other side of the media to provide evidence. I mean you would have to be blind, deaf, stupid and a total bot to not see the Israeli interference in US policies and politics these days. Sullivan was asked to respond to Netanyahu's claim, that he had the support of the majority of the Israeli people in his plans to attack Hamas's final stronghold in the city of Rafah and whether Biden could speak directly to Israelis. Netanyahu's claim is backed by polls. One recent survey found that 75% of Israelis support an attack on Hamas in Rafah, where the terrorist leaders are believed to be hiding and keeping the remaining 134 Israeli hostages. Where is the proof of that or that there were hostages to begin with? Sullivan responded with what he admitted was a non sequitur. Well, first of all, inherent in the question is a kind of an interesting irony. Which is you have the prime minister speaking on American television about his concerns about Americans interfering in Israeli politics and then your question is, should Americans be speaking into Israeli politics, which in fact we don't do nearly as much as they speak into ours, Sullivan said. Which is a true statement. But that's not a constructive answer to your question, just an observation, he added. The Anti-Defamation League has specifically identified the claim that Israel or Jews control American politics as a form of antisemitism, common in anti-Israel propaganda in the Middle East. Who made them judge and jury? Why are they even brought into the discussion at all? Is that not an obvious example of them interfering in American decisions and policies? Breitbart said, There is no known example of Israel interfering in an American election, haha turn it in. And certainly no Israeli leader has ever demanded that the U.S. replace its president, as President Joe Biden did last week with regard to Netanyahu. You know why? Because they selected them into office is why, all courtesy of AIPAC. Sullivan also said that in a phone call, Biden summoned officials from Israel to a meeting next week to discuss Rafah. Biden said it was nonsense that opposing an attack on Hamas in Rafah, meant allowing Hamas to win the war. Finally Biden said something of common sense. As for the author representing Breitbart, disappointing. But then do we really know about Breitbart? Perhaps we will find out. Andrew Breitbart was born to Irish American parents in Los Angeles on February 1, 1969. According to his birth certificate, his biological father was a folk singer. When he was three weeks old, he was adopted by Gerald and Arlene Breitbart, a restaurant owner and banker respectively and grew up in the affluent neighborhood of Brentwood. His adoptive family was Jewish; his mother had converted to Judaism when marrying his father. Breitbart studied at Hebrew school and had a Bar Mitzvah. Now you know why he and they are another Israeli apologist.

Here is another example of people speaking up, A row has broken out after Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer was told he should not interfere with Israel's internal politics and President Biden is turning on the Jewish state out of his own political interests ahead of the U.S. national elections in November. These are just some of the views Israelis in Jerusalem earlier this week. Israelis expressed disappointment with recent comments made by Schumer, criticizing Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's handling of the war in Gaza and suggesting it was time for Israelis to hold new elections. Speaking at a virtual gathering of Republican senators on Wednesday, Netanyahu hit back at Schumer, a lifetime supporter of Israel and the highest-ranking Jewish elected official, calling his comments wholly inappropriate and outrageous, according to reports. Clearly this is Jewish faction fighting and we are seeing them turn on each other now, due to the pressure the people are applying. This is a big result for the people. Israelis interviewed shared a similar sentiment when asked what they thought about Schumer's call for a new election. Saying, I don't think it's Schumer's place to comment on the politics in Israel or tell us we need to do a re-election. Well touche says the rest of the world, as Israel interferes in every country's elections. Perhaps the Israelis should consider that before passing comment on others?

Here is a further example of a Jewish person now questioning Israel, whilst it can come under faction fighting, it is still highlighting the issues. US Secretary of State Antony Blinken on Friday declared that any expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank would be inconsistent with international law, reversing a Trump era position that broke with longstanding US policy. Something the Trump followers need to understand, he is a puppet of Israel and Jewish policy, not American. It's been longstanding US policy, under Republican and Democratic administrations alike, that new settlements are counterproductive to reaching an enduring peace, Blinken said at a press conference in Buenos Aires. They're also inconsistent with international law. Our administration maintains a firm opposition to settlement expansion and in our judgement this only weakens, it doesn't strengthen, Israel's security. Why is Israel's security more important than American security, one has to ask?

Here is another attack on the old Jewish harvesting system. As the world's largest asset manager, BlackRock, is pushing back on Texas' decision to withdraw roughly $8.5 billion in assets belonging to the Texas Permanent School Fund (PSF), over what the state says is a boycott of energy companies. Texas State Board of Education Chairman Aaron Kinsey announced that the PSF would withdraw funds to comply with a 2021 state law, that seeks to prevent the state's public funds from being managed by financial institutions that boycott the oil and gas sector. Kinsey said that BlackRock's destructive approach toward the energy companies that this state and our world depend on is incompatible with our fiduciary duty to Texans. BlackRock Vice Chairman Mark McCombe responded to Kinsey in a letter, in which he wrote that the firm was dismayed by your announcement and said the decision puts short-term politics over your long-term fiduciary responsibilities. He went on to cite the schools and families as a reason to not do it, since when have these organizations ever cared about anything other than harvesting shekels?

This is another sea of change, but remember within it we are likely dealing with faction fighting between two dying control systems. We can let them carry on destroying each other, but we have to create and implement something better to replace them. The U.N. Security Council passed a resolution on Monday explicitly calling for a cease-fire in the Israel-Hamas war after the U.S. declined to exercise its veto power. Israel responded by canceling a visit this week by Israeli officials and top advisers to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to Washington, adding to the tensions between the two longtime allies amid Israel's military operations in the Gaza strip. The passage of the resolution, led and presented by the non-permanent members of the United Nations' most powerful body, comes after a series of resolutions addressing the Israel-Hamas war failed because of vetoes from the United States, China and Russia, because of disagreements over the phrasing of calls for a cease-fire. The decision of the U.S. to abstain, rather than veto the resolution, is also Washington's sharpest action to date at the United Nations against its ally. Israel is not an ally to anyone, when will people understand that as a fact. Total self-serving parasites, the world will be better off without them running everything. It also came ahead of an expected trip from top advisers to Netanyahu and Israeli government officials to Washington, as Israel and the U.S. find themselves at odds over a looming invasion of the southern Gazan city of Rafah. Israeli media reported ahead of the vote that Netanyahu threatened to cancel his officials' trip to Washington to discuss, among other things, humanitarian aid, the release of hostages and plans for protecting civilians in a planned operation in Rafah if the U.S. failed to veto the resolution. Shortly after the vote, Netanyahu's office announced that, in light of the change in the American position, Prime Minister Netanyahu has decided that the delegation will not travel to the US. Good, why would we want barbaric tyrants on our soil anyway?

AI warfare with Drones and GPS-missiles is established by Iran, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and Yemen through different but coordinated entities. They are waging a war of attrition on the Zionist-State Israel. They can take out all the infrastructure of Israel in NO-TIME. Iran wants only a one-State solution, Palestine only like before the Balfour agreement, with Jews and Palestinians living together again. Iraq is attacking Haifa and Ashdod sea ports. The Eilat sea port is closed and possibly the Ben Gurion International Airport closed soon as well? The Zionist experiment is doomed from all accounts. The false "Biblical" narrative of an Armageddon and a chosen people is playing out in the genocide of the Palestinians. This was very well planned already back when the bible was written. But it is all going to end in tears and failure, as the world awakens to the true horrors the Zionist's have perpetrated on this planet.

MEDICAL SECTION:

This was in our Blueprint show for last week, but had to be removed due to the Zionist Fascists at Jewtube deleting our last Blueprint show. So, we will have it in this show instead. Further advance planning for May was accomplished as Funeral Home Directors are another option to be considered because they've reported an increase in deaths. Our minutes-taker added that one director reported that they were having problems injecting embalming fluid because of extensive clots blocking arteries. With Big Pharma and the de-populationists still trying to concoct obnoxious excuses for people getting jabbed with their noxious death-and-disease-creating-vaccines, we thought it would be timely to remind members to re-consider taking another vaccine into their bodies.

This is an interesting article out of the New York Post, that could have been lifted straight from our Expose series and all things Covid. More and more people are now speaking up on this and regretting their earlier stances. It would be nice for once for them to apologize to all of us who warned them it was all bullshit, yet all we got in return was brutal abuse and name calling. We just passed the fourth anniversary of 15 days to slow the spread, the start of the Covid lockdowns that did damage from which we still haven't recovered. The author who is a professor said, I'm embarrassed to admit I fell for it. I was a Covid hawk in the early days, it seemed right at the time. It seemed and I assumed have been very costly to us all, it signifies zero research on it and just an acceptance of the official policy. Yet how long does it take people to understand official policy always seems to work against us? The Chinese called it a grave threat and they almost always downplayed bad things in China. There were reports of death rates ranging from 4% to 10%. Yes courtesy of fake Johns Hopkins math, where is their responsibility into this? Sure, Anthony Fauci, Nancy Pelosi and Bill de Blasio were telling us not to worry, to take cruises and go visit Chinatown, but I lacked confidence in them. Hey, I was at least right about that. They reversed course like a week later. It turned out, of course, Covid's mortality rate was significantly less than one-tenth of those early reports, and those deaths were mostly concentrated among the obese, the elderly and those with heart failure and diabetes. Plus the deaths that resulted from too-aggressive use of ventilators, which are themselves quite dangerous. Neither the lockdowns nor the masking requirements did any good, though they caused a lot of trauma, inconvenience and colossal economic destruction. Even long Covid, which we heard a lot about, turns out to be no different from the flu's long-term consequences, scientists just confirmed. So it took scientists who are paid to know these things four years, to work out what THI and many others told them 4 years ago. That augurs well for the public to have confidence in them, not! Then there were the deaths caused by Gov. Andrew Cuomo's program of moving still-contagious Covid patients into old-folks' homes, exposing the most vulnerable people to infection. Which was the subject of our very first Expose on Covid in May 2020, extraordinary how it takes people that long to work out. In short, the government response to Covid was probably more destructive than the virus itself. In retrospect, I should have been more skeptical. It's hard to believe I, of all people, trusted the government too much, but there you are. At least he has admitted it, it needs a lot more to humble themselves to stand up and speak out so it is never repeated again. Public-health officials admitted later they didn't consider the collateral damage from lockdowns, quarantines and the like in making their plans: They focused solely on preventing Covid's spread. Not only were they ineffective at that, Covid spread widely and just about as fast as everywhere else. It's the opposite of what public-health officials should focus on, since their job is, you know, public health, not the prevention of a single disease at all costs.

The economy still hasn't recovered from the distortions Covid measures introduced; binge drinking and alcohol-related liver disease are up; children's educations and development have been retarded and the nation has suffered a deep and widespread loss of trust in institutions, which, to be fair, is entirely justified. Again all things we warned about in 2020. Even The New York Times now sees sense: The more time students spent in remote instruction, the further they fell behind. And, experts say, extended closures did little to stop the spread of Covid, a Monday piece declares. The architects of these disastrous policies, figures like Fauci, Francis Collins and Deborah Birx escaped any reckoning. Politicians like Cuomo, Pelosi and California Gov. Gavin Newsom cheerfully flouted the rules they imposed on the little people, going to dinner parties and otherwise cavorting in defiance of social-distancing and mask mandates. Again why wasn't that addressed at the time? Why did people sit there like retards letting it all unfold upon us? As left-leaning blogger Nate Silver observed, It's kind of crazy and tells you a lot about who was writing the restrictions, that churches in some jurisdictions were subject to more restrictions than museums! The final blow came when public-health "experts," who had been condemning family Sunday dinners as inconsiderately dangerous, did a 180 and endorsed massive Black Lives Matter protests on the specious ground, Racism is a public-health problem. So is obesity, but one doubts they would have endorsed a March Against Fatness. Glad to see the author denigrated and or questioned experts, we at THI have found out that there are none, at any level. They made very clear that politics came before science, even though they accused their opponents of being anti-science. The Committee to Unleash Prosperity, which includes some of the experts who were skeptical of lockdowns, has released a Lessons Learned report with 10 main points, including:

Leaders should calm public fears, not stoke them. Lockdowns do not work to substantially reduce deaths or to reduce viral circulation. Lockdowns and social isolation had negative consequences that far outweighed benefits. Government should not suppress dissent or police the boundaries of science. As the Supreme Court weighs the constitutionality of government-induced speech suppression, that last is a particularly timely point. These experts are worth paying particular attention to, because they didn't fall for the hysteria. In the beginning I did fall for it and I've made my mea culpa elsewhere. But since I followed the data instead of the governmental diktats, I changed my mind pretty quickly. Because I became skeptical, Google demonetized my blog which is a bigger punishment than any lockdown advocate or enforcer has faced, despite being wrong, arrogant and guilty of causing great harm. Well, if there can't be any punishment and in today's America, the very idea of consequences for the nomenklatura runs the risk of being called white supremacist or insurrectionist, there can at least be remembrance. The "expert" class blew it, sold out or gloried in putting people under its thumb and it paid no price. Next time, and there will be a next time, ignore those people. And if they won't let you ignore them, make them. A refreshing report and more and more are thinking this way now. Questioning the government, experts, scientists, the law all in one speech, music to our ears. A victory for the Alt Media and the many medical people who criticized it, albeit a victory at great cost to us all in many ways. Perhaps those labeled lunatics for questioning the narrative, where the only sane ones left on the planet?

SOCIETY SECTION:

Here is an alarming report on another program designed for us by clowns in agencies. I mentioned it in the Clowns in Panic series about Robert David Steele and his CIA subsidiary company called OSS. He mentioned about giving phones to everyone on the planet and it referenced about banking, which we will cover a bit more later. But they never do things singularly, always a multiple of reasons behind what they do. Phones were about control of the people, but it has had devastating consequences since being brought in more heavily in the 2000's and the advent of the smart or not so smart phone. Something went suddenly and horribly wrong for adolescents in the early 2010s. By now you've likely seen the statistics: Rates of depression and anxiety in the United States which was fairly stable in the 2000s, rose by more than 50 percent in many studies from 2010 to 2019. The suicide rate rose 48 percent for adolescents ages 10 to 19. For girls ages 10 to 14, it rose 131 percent. The problem was not limited to the U.S.: Similar patterns emerged around the same time in Canada, the U.K., Australia, New Zealand, the Nordic countries and beyond. By a variety of measures and in a variety of countries, the members of Generation Z (born in and after 1996) are suffering from anxiety, depression, self-harm and related disorders at levels higher than any other generation for which we have data. The decline in mental health is just one of many signs that something went awry. Loneliness and unfriendliness among American teens began to surge around 2012. Academic achievement went down, too. According to The Nation's Report Card, scores in reading and math began to decline for U.S. students after 2012, reversing decades of slow, but generally a steady increase. PISA, the major international measure of educational trends, shows that declines in math, reading and science happened globally, also beginning in the early 2010s. All of it is being linked back to the increase in the usage of phones. The addictive behavior of the use of it, has caused most of the maladies mentioned earlier. Loneliness can be ended by people learning to come together again and talk to each other, without the use of phones. We survived for most of our lives without personal phones, only a house phone on the wall. But many couldn't afford that and relied on public phone boxes only. Yet we didn't have anxiety over that and we didn't walk around checking whether someone would call or message us that day. We just got on with life.

Many countries turned to the scientific method and embraced atheism, nontheism and apatheism. Notice the labeling of people who decided not to follow, reduced to name calling again. As you will notice, there is no clear pattern, though European studies suggest that countries with economic growth are losing their religion more rapidly. The situation in the East is just as interesting, so with that in mind, take a look at some of the most atheistic countries in the world.

People's Republic of China: The country that gave the world Buddhism, Taoism and Confucianism is mostly unreligious. Partly, that is due to China's unitary one-party ruled by the Chinese Communist Party. This does not mean that the people of China do not cherish their spirituality, though in much less obvious ways than people in other countries.

Japan: The third largest economy's population is primarily non-religious or secular. Many Japanese people hold onto their traditional philosophies, but the majority are not religious in the Western sense of the word.

Republic of Estonia: The Baltic country is consistent with its no religious affiliation. Around 60 percent of people do not practice religion, and those who do are primarily Christians. The country is doing reasonably well despite being one of the smallest economies in the world.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea: Around 70 percent of North Koreans are not religious. The rest are divided between Chondoism, Shamanism and a small percentage of Buddhism. According to one of the State Department reports, Christians were considered the most dangerous political class of people and the persecution is violent and intense.

Czech Republic: This Central European country enjoys a relatively high per capita income due to the car industry and nuclear power plants. In the first half of the 20th century, around 90 percent of the population were Christians. As of 2021, less than 12% of the population identified with Christianity, mainly Catholicism, while another 10 percent belonged to other religions. Around seven in ten Czechs are religiously unaffiliated.

South Korea: This highly developed country has seen a rise in Christianity and a revival of Buddhism. However, 60% of its citizens identify with no religion. Like many countries in this region, spirituality is present in everyday life, but it is more about upholding traditions than believing in one religion.

Netherlands: Several of the happiest nations in the world are also mostly atheists or hold little regard for religion. The Netherlands is one of them, with 58% of its people labeling themselves as non-religious. The Dutch, however, believe in ecology, work-life balance, strong family ties and acceptance of diversity.

France: One of the largest economies and the most developed countries. France has a rich history, but when it comes to religion, things are only going downhill. Projections show that the non-religious population will continue its growth in the upcoming decades.

United Kingdom: The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland is also a European country with a rich history and powerful impact worldwide. Over 31 percent of its people are religiously unaffiliated, that comes as no surprise if you look at the country's history and relationship with the Catholic church. The British royals are the head of the Church of England, a Protestant Anglican church and they've been a part of this religion since the XVI century. The British royals like other public royals are head of nothing anymore, that pawn was extinguished in 2013.

Australia: The country embraces diversity, so it comes as no surprise that Australians are not that invested in religion. The believers are primarily members of Anglican and Catholic churches, though the country recognizes over 100 religions.

Germany: Around 42 percent of Germans are non-religious, and among them, 12 percent are atheists. Most Germans say religion has no significance in their lives, with only 33 percent believing that higher powers have an effect on their lives.

Sweden: Non-religion is common in Sweden, a 2023 Gallup International Survey 2023 confirmed the nation has the highest percentage of citizens who do not believe in God. For most citizens, religion is not important, so much so that in 2016, Sweden became the first country to open neutral cemeteries.

Denmark: Around 50 percent of Danish people are not religious, with only 30 percent stating they believe in God or a higher power. Approximately 20 percent are undecided, though over 70 percent are registered at the Church of Denmark. Denmark is open to all religions and like other Scandinavian countries, it prides itself on being open-minded and accepting. Denmark like Russia is open to all religions, why? Well as FHSTOS Plus 24, they have one and the same ancestors is why. The panic of the churches globally now is all so clear, people everywhere are switching that control, fear, shame, guilt and perpetual sin program off, none more so than the youth.

EXPOSE:

This may not be the most exciting or interesting expose, but it is important everyone gets a grasp of this before we sleep walk into another control system, even worse than the last one. The world of money, do we truly understand it? nope, just like stock markets, law and governments then. The clue is you are not meant to understand it, because then you will work out it is all a fraud. But here is an explanation of the complicated nature of it and if you still don't get it don't despair, neither does most other people, including some CEO's of leading banks. Remember when I warned in Cosmic Voice about fresh air tokens as I call them? Perhaps this piece will serve as a reminder.

WHAT IS PROGRAMMABLE MONEY?

The word programmable should alarm everyone. Let's start today's exploration with a simple question: what is a central bank digital currency? Here's the not-so-simple answer: central bank digital currency is an electronic token of a nation's official currency issued by that nation's monetary authority, often but not exclusively using distributed ledger technology. Still unclear? Don't worry, that's to be expected. Specialist language is often used to dissuade the public from becoming engaged in important topics, and the world of currency creation is certainly no exception to that rule. From the IMF's, SDRs to SWIFT and CIPS, from DLTs to CBDCs, from the petroyuan to the digital yuan, those seeking a deeper understanding of monetary matters quickly find themselves drowning in a sea of impenetrable acronyms and complicated jargon. So let's get back to basics: what is money? Although it's a simple question, the answer to that question largely depends on who you ask. If you ask a member of the Sound Money Defense League, you'll get an earful about the history of precious metals. If you ask John Titus, you'll get a half-hour presentation involving colored marbles and Kool Kats and Jolly Jesters. If you ask me, you'll get a documentary on the Federal Reserve or a radio program on monetary reform or an hour-long podcast on Survival Currency. But if you ask our friends over at the Bank for International Settlements, you'll get a Jackson Pollack-inspired work of visual diarrhea that looks like this: Whoever is making these infographics for the BIS and the WHO and the other members of the globalist alphabet mafia needs to be fired. But, as ridiculous as this kaleidoscopic Venn diagram of nonsense may seem at first glance, the money flower does tell us something important about what we think of as money in the current economy: it can take many forms. From peer-to-peer, non-electronic money (e.g. local currency) to universally accessible, electronic, non-central-bank-issued money (e.g. bank deposits) to electronic, central bank-issued, non-peer-to-peer, non-universally accessible money (e.g. central bank reserves), money or at least what most people think of as money in their day-to-day lives comes in a variety of categorizable varieties. And then there's CBDC. Which is Clown Based Direct Currency. As you'll note, central bank-issued electronic money comes in different flavors, from central bank digital currency to central bank-issued cryptocurrency (retail) to central bank-issued cryptocurrency (wholesale) and occupies multiple spots on the BIS' chart. Is CBDC universally accessible? Possibly. Is it peer-to-peer? It depends. Both universally accessible and peer-to-peer? Well, it could be. You see, CBDCs are not a singular, rigidly defined thing. From the underlying technology used to issue, track and record these digital tokens to the network, upon which they flow to the protocol that network follows, every part of a central bank digital currency is customizable. On the surface, this might seem like a trivial point. After all, why should Joe Blogs or Jane Soccermom care what type of distributed ledger technology (DLT) a CBDC operates on, or whether it uses DLT at all? You scan your device, you hear a beep, your account is debited by a certain amount and you walk out of the store with your pack of gum. What's the big deal? The big deal, of course, is that CBDCs are not like cash or bank deposits or the other forms of payment that we use in our everyday transactions. They are programmable. Just like a piece of software running on your computer or an app on your stupidphone, CBDCs can be programmed to act in certain ways. Conditions can be set on their use. They can be created or deleted, frozen, devalued or inflated with the click of a button. And, like any piece of software, they can be updated, with or without your knowledge to provide new functionality at any time. So here is the next question we must tackle in this exploration: What can CBDCs be programmed to do? This is the danger of this technology, as all of their other programs and programming of us are starting to break down, they are trying to introduce another type of programming that they and only they control. But the people coming together can and will end this.

HOW COULD THIS BE USED AGAINST US?

Imagine going to the store as usual, buy something and take it to the register, it scans his device and waits for the beep. But this time the beep doesn't come, but he has enough funds in his account to buy a pack of gum. I'm sorry, sir, but it says here that you participated in the Freedom Protest last Sunday. The central bank has deemed you a domestic terrorist and frozen access to your wallet. You'll have to report to the nearest Re-education Centre for a full indoctrination course before you can make purchases again. Just a few years ago this scenario might have seemed like far-fetched science fiction. But, given what we've experienced in recent years from Canada's crackdown on the Freedom Convoy supporters money, the PayPal, GoFundme and Patreon censorship scandal, who can deny that we are on the cusp of this scenario becoming a daily occurrence in the dawning digital dystopia? This is the danger of programmable money. More and more people have seen the now-infamous clip of Agustin Carstens, general manager of the Bank for International Settlements explaining the appeal of CBDCs to the banking cabal. Right in the middle of an IMF livestream on cross-border payments, Carstens admits plain as day that, CBDCs will enable the creation of a financial surveillance and control grid that dictators of the past could only dream of: We don't know who's using a $100 bill today and we don't know who's using a 1,000 peso bill today. The key difference with the CBDC is the central bank will have absolute control on the rules and regulations, that will determine the use of that expression of central bank liability and also we will have the technology to enforce that. The entire CBDC agenda is laid bare by Carstens in those two chilling sentences. It is not just about the complete surveillance of all transactions that CBDCs will enable them to, determine the use of that expression of central bank liability? This is more financial gobbledygook designed to hide the true horror of a chilling proposal. But what does that actually mean in plain English? It means that CBDCs could be programmed so that they are only spendable if the holder of those funds meets certain requirements. Do you remember that parking ticket you forgot to pay last month? Well, your central bank-issued CBDC wallet does, and it will just subtract those funds, plus a late payment fee from your account when you're not looking. Get caught supporting the wrong fundraiser or the wrong political cause? Don't worry, in a world of CBDC transactions you wouldn't have been allowed to donate to that cause in the first place because your wallet wouldn't let you! Following this line of thought, programmable money could also be used to perfect a system of carbon credits and individualized ESG scores. This is why they wish to eliminate cash; it is not trackable for these control freaks. If only they controlled the flow of real criminals within their own banking structure, like money laundering, black budget transfers, child trafficking transfer done by Standard Charter and others, drug money and the dodgy offshore accounts for various rogue enterprises like political assassination funds. There was a long standing account in Bulgaria, designated solely for political assassination, no doubt connected to the CIA Eastern Europe division in Sofia. What happens if they delete all religions in favor of public support for their god, Lucifer? Food, drink, smoking, health products could all be weaponized. In today's world, it would be incredibly difficult for the government to implement a scheme where every store has to check your carbon allowance before allowing your next purchase. Sure, EBT cards can be programmed to disallow purchases from liquor stores, casinos or other naughty businesses, but stopping people from spending their own bank deposits or cash is much trickier. In the CBDC world of the future, however, such restrictions could be programmed into the ledger itself. If your carbon credit or your ESG score is below a certain amount, no soup for you! All about control of what you buy and what you can't, so that only the sheep like people complying to their whims, will be allowed to spend, presuming of course they have any money or credits to begin with. As jobs with the robot world will be in short supply remember and so everyone is then forced to sign up for this or have no money. The Universal Basic Income program plays into this, people go yay free money! But nothing is free in this world, except breathing currently, but how long before they impose a breathing tax? The UBI is a control system designed to bring in this CBDC program, do you all not see that yet? Crypto or death currency is exactly the same, fresh air tokens designed to lead towards the UBI and CBDC fake currency. These concerns are not merely theoretical, nor are they the ravings of wide-eyed conspiracy theories. A director of the Bank of England came out last year to highlight these very features of digital currency, declaring that there could be some socially beneficial outcomes to stopping people from buying what they want, such as preventing activity which is seen to be socially harmful in some way. Ah the classic it is for your health, safety and security line again, turn it in. What's more, we know that the idea of a social credit system being used to allow or disallow purchases, is not just some Black Mirror-esque sci-fi fantasy, but a lived reality already in China. It requires absolutely no imagination whatsoever to understand how programmable money could be used to restrict our purchases based on our social credit ratings, carbon allowances, ESG scores, allegiance to political causes or absolutely any other arbitrary criteria. And we haven't even gotten to the economic ramifications of programmable money. The infinite malleability of CBDCs is a wet dream to the technocratic tyrants who wish to manipulate the financial system to their benefit. Consider this: CBDCs are not fungible. Each digital token in your CBDC wallet is individually identifiable, sequesterable and programmable. So let's imagine the central banksters, in their infinite wisdom, decide that people aren't spending enough. They could build demurrage into the network protocols; the longer a CBDC sits unspent in your wallet, the less it's worth. Demurrage is a charge payable to the owner of a chartered ship, in respect of failure to load or discharge the ship within the time agreed. Yet more shipping and water terms for the current sea (currency). This is not a hypothetical concern or flight of fancy. Even the UK government committee that made headlines for condemning the plan to create a new UK digital currency as a solution in search of a problem, no that is their solution to a problem since their banking system is imploding as THI forecasted 5/6 years ago. It listed the fact that a digital pound could be set to be spent by a deadline or on particular products or services, as one of the potential advantages of a Bank of England-issued CBDC. Advantages for banks is never an advantage for the people. This would eliminate savings for a rainy day with the crypto currency, as they are telling you they expire, a bit like credit card points then. Or take the problem of bank runs. If and when digital currency becomes predominant, the threat of bank runs becomes non-existent. If CBDCs are designed, as they certainly will be, so that they are not interchangeable with bank deposits or cash or other forms of central bank liability, then there's no withdrawing them from the bank and stuffing them under your mattress. In other words, we the people will never have any private form of monetary transactions, all banking and the method of currency would be held by them and we have no say in it. It cannot get more terrifying than that, this is what I warned of with the Clowns in Panic show. Bank bail-ins? Negative interest rates? Hyperinflation? Whatever happens, you're in for the ride. Yes, even a moment's thought reveals that as bad as things are right now, with governments freezing the bank accounts of protesters and payment processors threatening to fine users for spreading disinformation. Plus banks cutting off business with those who commit wrong think, as what happened with Kanye West criticizing Israel and the Jews, it will be much, much worse in a world of programmable money.

WHAT CAN WE DO ABOUT IT?

CBDCs are not a singular thing. They can take different forms, they can be rolled out in different ways, and there is no international standard for their implementation among the various national central banks (yet). Just like the roll out of the invasive AI. Governments are oblivious as to what is unfolding, being pulled one way and then the other providing adequate pressure to distract them from the real issues. This is why in our blueprint we asked for committees to assess everything that is beneficial to the people or not. And if it is found not worthy it should be deleted entirely and a new thing put in place that is beneficial to the people. Indeed, it's even possible that any given country might reject the use of CBDCs altogether, they should until the whole implications of it is presented to the people first. Given this state of affairs, it's tempting to think that a respite from the CBDC nightmare will be found in this or that corner of the globe. Maybe this country won't implement the social credit control grid. Maybe that country is too undeveloped to roll out a proper digital surveillance grid. Maybe some freedom-respecting, sovereignty-loving nation will stand up to the globalists and reject digital currencies altogether! Not all accepted the dollar at first, but eventually had no option due to these same people trying to implement this. It's a nice thought, but CBDCs are already being used, trialed or studied in almost every nation on earth. In fact, far from technological backwardness shielding populations from the digital currency agenda, CBDCs seem to be rolling out fastest in some of the lesser-developed nations. Seduced by the idea of free money, which is another opportunity for people to be lazy. That is how this planet has been controlled, people all too eager to have their lives controlled by unknown entities, because then they don't have to do anything. But like magic, that stance comes at a great cost. How is this money magic? Because it is not based upon commodities of each country, it is created out of thin air for the purpose of controlling the people, just like magic. As for freedom-respecting nations resisting the push for programmable money, the very BRICS members that some still falsely believe to be standing up to the globalist mafia, are not just embracing the digital currency agenda, they are in the case of the explicitly globalist, Agenda 2030-promoting Chinese and Russian governments, leading the race to implement CBDCs of their own. Which is why I put in the comment on Putin's last address in the last THI show, that BRICS can be used as an alternative, but it has to be stripped of the officials who started and a new charter for and by the people replacing it. The hope of avoiding this CBDC calamity does not lie in the hands of some mythical group of crusading white hats on the global(ist) stage, as the hopium addicts contest. There is no cabal of ruling oligarchs anywhere on the planet, who would reject a technology that could help them to better control their own citizens. On the contrary.

Like so many other aspects of the globalist agenda, we soon discover that the power to end this madness is ours and ours alone. The key to the digital prison is right here in our own hands. The future depends on us. It depends on us finding others who understand the gravity of the situation and building community with them. It depends on us developing survival currencies to see us through the coming storm. It depends on us finding and supporting our local producers. It depends on us boycotting the bad and buycotting the good. It depends on us embracing Cash Fridays and Black Market Friday and then realizing that these things don't just have to happen on Friday. It depends on us doing the million things that we can do to beat the banksters at their own game and win the war on cash. Of course, it won't be easy. It's not supposed to be.

The path of convenience leads to the world of total surveillance and control. If we want to avoid that path, we're going to have to get used to taking the path less travelled. But in the end, it's our choice to make. Yes the convenience path that has damaged and controlled us so much, in essence we did the work for them. For the time being, we decide who we transact with and in what form. We decide whether we buy this item or that item. We decide whether we buy from this business or that business. We decide whether we shop at the supermarket or the farmer's market. We decide whether we pay with cash or credit or Apple Pay or seashells or playing cards or anything else. We decide whether we pay over the table or under the table, whether we barter or trade or provide service in kind or whether we just walk away and buy nothing at all.

The choice is ours to make, and we're making it thousands of times each and every day whether we know it or not. No, the headlong rush toward CBDCs and digital control will not be stopped just because we join hands and sing kumbaya. Every country around the world will try pushing digital currency on their populations at some point in the coming years. But it is not set in stone that this push will succeed. Programmable "money" is only money if we submit to using it. Programmable money for programmable people, is that what we want in life? Our members will all say no, then we must strive hard to prevent it and build our own banking system free of harvesting clowns. How can we do that? We at THI already have with our banking solution, plus the mortgage solution.

FHSTOS SECTION:

One of the places I would like to visit before departing this lifetime is, Machu Picchu. A fascinating place steeped in history, steeped in dream time visitations for me and an enigma in terms of understanding the purpose of the place and also who built it? Machu Picchu, the ancient Inca citadel perched on a mountain ridge in Peru, is one of the most stunning and mysterious archaeological sites in the world. For decades, historians have relied on Spanish colonial documents to date the construction and occupation of this marvel of engineering and architecture. Spanish colonials were Sephardic Jews and they have done nothing but corrupt and ultimately delete our history here. However, a new study has challenged the conventional wisdom and suggested that Machu Picchu may be older than previously believed. Well I never, who would have thought that I say sarcastically! The study, published in the journal Antiquity, used radiocarbon dating technology to analyze human remains found in a cemetery at Machu Picchu. The researchers used a technique called accelerator mass spectrometry (AMS) to measure the amount of carbon-14 in the bones, which decays at a known rate over time. By comparing the carbon-14 levels in the samples with those of known age, the researchers were able to estimate when the people lived and died. The results showed that Machu Picchu was in use from about A.D. 1420 to A.D. 1530, making it at least 20 years older than the accepted historical record suggests. (M) Just twenty years older? Turn it in, like the Pyramids, that was built long before the 1400's. According to the documents written by Spanish conquistadors, Machu Picchu was built after 1440 by the Inca emperor Pachacuti, who expanded the Inca empire to its greatest extent. However, the radiocarbon dating evidence indicates that the site may have been built by his predecessor, Viracocha, or even earlier.

This finding has important implications for our understanding of Inca history and culture. It suggests that Machu Picchu was not a mere retreat for the Inca elite, but a strategic and ceremonial center that played a key role in the consolidation and expansion of the Inca state. It also challenges the reliability of using colonial documents as the sole source of information for dating ancient ruins in the Americas. The study argues that perhaps the time has come for the radiocarbon evidence to assume priority in reconstructions of the chronology of the Inca emperors and the dating of Inca monumental sites such as Machu Picchu. Machu Picchu is a remarkable example of the architectural and engineering skills of the Inca civilization. The site consists of about 200 structures, including temples, palaces, terraces and fountains, all built on a steep mountain ridge about 2,420 meters above sea level. The Inca used simple tools and local materials to carve and fit the stones, some weighing more than 50 tons, without using mortar or wheels. They also developed sophisticated systems of water management and agriculture to sustain the site.

Machu Picchu is almost the only Inca site in Peru that survived the Spanish invasion and the last 500 years unscathed. It is one of the few places where you can experience the architectural ingenuity of the Inca masons. The site was rediscovered in 1911 by the American explorer Hiram Bingham, who led several expeditions to excavate and document the ruins. Since then, Machu Picchu has become a UNESCO World Heritage Site and a major tourist attraction, attracting millions of visitors every year. These findings not only provide a more accurate timeline for the construction and use of Machu Picchu, but also offer a deeper understanding of Inca history and culture. As researchers continue to delve into the mysteries of this ancient site, who knows what other secrets Machu Picchu may reveal? Indeed, like it was not built by the Incas at all, was just used by the Incas because the building was already there from long before. Just like the Salt Lake Temple. The Inca story is mired in many myths, where they someone else than depicted? The legends of Viracocha many surprise or intrigue many of you, as to where they came from. More on that later.

This is a very sad story and in my opinion it was deliberate given the names involved in it. It goes some way to a statement I made a few times, of do we really know who are parents are? The switching babies in hospitals is one of the great fully undiscovered stories, we know it happens but just how prevalent is this and who is doing it and why? It goes some way to proving another portion of the FHSTOS series in relation to the natives in America and Canada. Given where it took place and we covered another story of Kevin Annett's narrative, this has much deeper potential under currents. It was a simple at-home DNA testing kit, a Christmas day gift, that upended the lives of two Canadian men forever. Richard Beauvais, from the coastal town of Sechelt, British Columbia, grew up his whole life believing he was indigenous. This next line is the big reveal, that brings in deeper ponderings. But the test he took showed that he had a mix of Ukrainian, Polish and Ashkenazi Jewish ancestry. Around the same time and nearly 1,500 miles (2,400km) away, the sister of Eddy Ambrose from Winnipeg, Manitoba, who was raised in a Ukrainian family, also took a DNA test and discovered that she was not related to Eddy. Rather, Mr. Beauvais was her biological brother. This led to a life-changing revelation: that two men, Richard Beauvais and Eddy Ambrose were born on the same day at the same hospital in the small town of Arborg, Manitoba, in 1955, but were switched at birth and taken home by each other's biological parents. The Winnipeg-based lawyer has successfully sought out compensation for other Canadians switched at birth in the past, but in those cases, the individuals were born in federally run hospitals. Mr. Beauvais and Mr. Ambrose are the third known case of a birth mix-up in Manitoba. Two other cases have been reported in the Atlantic province of Newfoundland. Mr. Gange said it is difficult to know just how rare or common these stories are. He noted that Mr. Beauvais and Mr. Ambrose made the discovery only through a fluke, thanks to the DNA test kit. This is just my own guess, but I believe that as at-home DNA test kits become more prevalent, you will find other cases like this. I believe he is correct, but maybe shocked at the levels of it. The pondering behind this has to go in a sinister and deliberate manner, given yet again there is connections to the Jewish with this. It is just staggering the amount of times they are involved in skullduggery in almost every facet of society. In FHSTOS we mentioned that the sub gray race, a mixture of the jet black and the Rus derelicts became the Ashkenazi's after moving north out of India. We also put forward that these Jews then went across the Baring Strait and became what is known as the "Indians", why? Because they were from India and not indigenous at all. Those people when arriving in America, went onto devastating the indigenous population numbered around 200M. Once the numbers dwindled they began mating and integrating into the local populace and the transition was complete. This is why many members of the native tribes say they have links back to the Jews, the Cherokee and Lakotas in particular. The fact these babies were switched and Jews installed in their place, brings up the notion of another secret hostile takeover of America and Canada using Jewish blood to take over the local populaces. The infestation as we have found out on many other shows, is overwhelming. Ponder on this for a second, you have a group of people that represent 0.2% of the population, let's say for a second they are black. How can that same 0.2% of people, which is very small in numbers reach the top echelon of everything in this country? Be it banking, finance, government, agencies, state and local governments, big tech, space industry and the list goes on and on. Wouldn't you question as to why so many blacks reached those positions? What is the difference? The difference is, if it was blacks it would be more obvious, these people operate in stealth. Change their names, switch babies, install their people everywhere and then take over whole countries. All with just 0.2% of the American populace. Does that make any rational sense?

Here is another pondering because I asked, where did all their people come from? Did they come from underground was my line of thinking. How could they do that? You get the Government and fake agencies like the Bureau of Land management or BLM to designate whole swathes of land, said to be totaling 165K square miles, I believe that is bigger than we are told. But then you have another group take over vast swathes of land as well, the Federal's. But what is or are the Federals? a: of or constituting a form of government in which power is distributed between a central authority and a number of constituent territorial units. Remember the U.S. is a British territorial unit. b: of or relating to the central government of a federation as distinguished from the governments of the constituent units. c: formed by a compact between political units, that surrender their individual sovereignty to a central authority but retain limited residuary powers of government. At which point in their story was the people consulted to surrender their individual sovereignty? Because if they were not, that renders that constitution or act, as void. often capitalized: of, relating to, or loyal to the federal government or the Union armies of the U.S. in the American Civil War. capitalized: being or belonging to a style of architecture and decoration current in the U.S. following the American Revolution. As we found out, those unions were of British and French, not American. And the American revolution was as true as the Russian revolution in 1917, both "revolutions" were run, orchestrated and operated by Zionist's. capitalized: advocating or friendly to the principle of a federal government with strong centralized powers. especially: of or relating to the American Federalists. archaic: of or relating to a compact or treaty. Compact what does that mean or entail? Compact: occupying a small volume by reason of efficient use of space. Occupying being the operative word. Feder – al may have more of a meaning to THI members. Feder-al Reserve was a Rothschild banking enslavement group, now owned by the Black Sun enslavement group, courtesy of Trump and the Trustee.

MYSTERY SECTION:

This was sent in by a member and is an interesting concept in light of the warning of an August event this year. Donald Trump dubbed The 9/11 President. Born in New York. He was the 45th US President which is a 9. And potentially the 47th US President? Which is an 11. 9/11 of course is an infamous day in New York 23 years ago. 9-1-1 is the emergency code in America. But who or what emergency are we referring to? 9/11 is a false flag day as many events of a bad nature has taken place on that date. Why? It is a ritual sacrifice day. Sep 11: Egyptian festival marking the return to Egypt of Goddess Isis as the star of Sept/Sirius, and the God Osiris as the rising Nile River. So, Isis and Osiris rise on September 11th, a sacrifice day. Albert Pike once said, When a hero is needed we will provide one. Trump is that fake hero and savior program.

But let's look at the Viracocha narrative and dissect it and see what makes sense or doesn't. Viracocha is the great creator deity in the pre-Inca and Inca mythology in the Andes region of South America. According to the myth Viracocha had a human appearance and was generally considered as bearded. Does that sound like a description of a Central American? Clearly not. According to the myth he ordered the construction of Tiwanaku. It is also said that he was accompanied by men also referred to as Viracochas.

With other compound names include Ticsi Viracocha, Contiti Viracocha and Kon-Tiki Viracocha, the source of the name of Thor Heyerdahl's raft. Which is related to the Scandinavians. Other designations are the creator or teacher of the world. But are those descriptions as wide ranging as some make out? Making them out as gods or god itself, or can there be a more simple explanation? What if these were Rus/Slavic/Aryan travelers who upon exploring the world come across this region and tribes people. They then taught them agriculture, writing and building skills, which to the native is supernatural and then passed down as such. But what if the tribes described him as the creator, because he built their world? Teacher of their world, not the whole world, would that make more sense? Remember the tiny islands in the Pacific for 50 or more years worshipped the US Military as gods, who came from the sky dropping off supplies. They then built a replica US airplane and paid homage to it for decades after WW2. For the Inca the Viracocha cult was more important than the sun cult. Viracocha was the most important deity in the Inca pantheon and seen as the creator of all things, or the substance from which all things are created and intimately associated with the sea. Viracocha was immediately followed by Inti, the Sun. Who is Inti? Inti and his sister, Mama Quilla also spelled Mama Killa, the Moon goddess were generally considered benevolent deities. Mama Killa, all sounds like Kali Ma to me. She then conceived and bore him two children. So they were incestuous just like the Egyptians and their fake gods. Their court is served by the Rainbow, the Pleiades, Venus, and others. Suggesting Inti came from those places. Manco Cápac, the founding Inca ancestor, was thought to have been the son of Inti. According to myth, Inti taught Manco Cápac and his daughter Mama Ocllo the arts of civilization. However, another legend identifies Manco Cápac as the son of Viracocha. In a different myth, Inti is the son of the Earth goddess Pachamama and the sky god. Pachamama is described as Earth Mother or Mother nature. After the Sephardic Jews known as the Conquistadors raided the region, they changed Pachamama to the Virgin Mary. Inti also becomes the second husband of Pachamama. Viracocha created the universe, sun, moon and stars and time by commanding the sun to move over the sky and civilization itself. Viracocha was worshipped as god of the sun and of storms. So-called Staff Gods do not all necessarily fit well with the Viracocha interpretation. Cosmogony according to Spanish accounts: According to a myth recorded by Juan de Betanzos, Viracocha rose from Lake Titicaca or sometimes the cave of Paqariq Tampu during the time of darkness to bring forth light. Was that an underground base or did they sail the oceans below our feet? Lake Titicaca is one the portal sites. He made the sun, moon and the stars, could it be these Incas were born underground? And so suddenly they see the celestial lights? He made mankind by breathing into stones, but his first creation were brainless giants that displeased him. So, he destroyed them with a flood and made humans, beings who were better than the giants, from smaller stones. After creating them, they were scattered all over the world. Sounds like an overlay and Anu that to me and the Tower of Babel story we have covered previously.

Viracocha eventually disappeared across the Pacific Ocean, said by walking on the water and never returned. He wandered the earth disguised as a beggar, teaching his new creations the basics of civilization, as well as working numerous miracles. The next regardless of who Virococha is or where he was from, is another example of the people not doing right here. Many, however, refused to follow his teachings, devolving into warfare and delinquency; Viracocha wept when he saw the plight of the creatures he had created. It was thought that Viracocha would re-appear in times of trouble. Yes the savior returns program, but why would he return to help them again, when they failed themselves? There is the lesson right there, there are still people thinking the gods, Council or others should come and save them, but why should they? Are we children always waiting to be saved? Pedro Sarmiento de Gamboa wrote that Viracocha was described as a man of medium height, white and dressed in a white robe like an alb secured round the waist and that he carried a staff and a book in his hands. Viracocha was white and a teacher, sounds like one of the Volkhovs to me, part of the Great White Brotherhood, not only spoken of in Central America, but the native tribes of America as well. In one legend he had one son, Inti, and two daughters, Mama Killa and Pachamama. In this legend, he destroyed the people around Lake Titicaca with a Great Flood called Unu Pachakuti, lasting 60 days and 60 nights, saving two to bring civilization to the rest of the world. These two beings are Manco Cápac, the son of Inti (sometimes taken as the son of Viracocha), which name means splendid foundation and Mama Uqllu, which means mother fertility. These two founded the Inca civilization carrying a golden staff, called tapac-yauri. In another legend, he fathered the first eight civilized human beings. In some stories, he has a wife called Mama Qucha. In another legend, Viracocha had two sons, Imahmana Viracocha and Tocado Viracocha. After the Great Flood and the Creation, Viracocha sent his sons to visit the tribes to the northeast and northwest to determine if they still obeyed his commandments. Viracocha traveled North. During their journey, Imaymana and Tocado gave names to all the trees, flowers, fruits and herbs. They also taught the tribes which of these were edible, which had medicinal properties and which were poisonous. Eventually, Viracocha, Tocado and Imahmana arrived at Cusco in modern-day Peru and the Pacific seacoast, where they walked away across the water until they disappeared. Could this be a description of them going underwater and vanishing into a submersible? Whether that is a craft or a submarine, which is depicted on the hieroglyphs in Egypt? The word "Viracocha" literally means Sea Foam. Quite a varied difference in the depictions to select from there and I would suggest some were added to in order to cause confusion and the Christianity narrative installed, hence the reference to Commandments.

Etymology: Ticsi Huiracocha (Spanish:Ticsi Viracocha) may have several meanings. In the Quechuan languages, ticsi means origin or beginning, wira means fat and qucha means lake, sea or reservoir. Viracocha's many epithets include great, all knowing, powerful, etc. Some people state that Wiraqucha could mean Fat or foam of the sea. Vira (Huiracocha) can also be derived from the Quechua word huyra the end of all things, and that Ticsi Viracocha therefore could have the meaning lake of origin and of the end of all things. Controversy over the White God: The first Spanish chroniclers from the 16th century made no mention of any identification with Viracocha. The first to do so was Pedro Cieza de León in 1553. Similar accounts by Spanish chroniclers (e.g. Juan de Betanzos) describe Viracocha as a "white god", often with a beard. The whiteness of Viracocha is however not mentioned in the native authentic legends of the Incas and most modern scholars therefore had considered the "white god" story to be a post-conquest Spanish invention. Or the Spanish rewrote the narrative, eliminated the Incas and so all traces of the history was removed. Remember there was a lot of oral tradition within the tribes and why many of them were wiped out to create his story, not our story. Wiracochan, the pilgrim preacher of knowledge, the master of time, is described as a person with superhuman power, a bearded tall man dressed as priest or astronomer. Conversion to Christianity: Spanish scholars and chroniclers provide many insights regarding the identity of Viracocha. Bartolomé de las Casas states that viracocha means creator of all things. Juan de Betanzos confirms the above in saying that, we may say that Viracocha is God. Polo, Sarmiento de Gamboa, Blas Valera and Acosta all reference Viracocha as a creator. Guamán Poma, an indigenous chronicler, considers the term "viracocha" to be equivalent to creator. Spanish interpreters generally attributed the identity of supreme creator to Viracocha during the initial years of colonization. Yes he created their world, but is not the creator on the bigger scale. Yes he likely a god, but again not the god or creator. Due to the infestation of Christianity these terms have become corrupted, so that they can present their story and fake god. The decision to use the term "God" in place of "Viracocha" is seen as the first step in the evangelization of the Incas. The reasoning behind this strategy includes the fact that it was likely difficult to explain the Christian idea of "God" to the Incas, who failed to understand the concept. In addition, replacing reference to Viracocha with "God" facilitated the substitution of the local concept of divinity with Christian theology. And there you have it, they changed the language of the natives to distort the meaning of it all. Thankfully now that is all starting to unravel and more clarity and our story is being brought forward. Our story is unfolding, but the best is yet to come.

ENDING PIECE:

The BP chat I promised with a prominent figure is now going ahead next week after a clash of time zones canceled today's call. But it is still on schedule and may have more to announce in next week's Blueprint show. The name is being withheld until safe to do so, we at THI don't sensationalism and jump the gun, we respect people's say and we will reveal when safe to do so. Today marks two anniversaries for me, one spent and one still ongoing. The spent one was my wedding anniversary, the ongoing one is 22 years today I arrived in America. How life has changed since that celebratory day, both for myself and the group.

Benjamin Fulford and his newly established White Dragon Society has a suspect clue. The White Dragon group was 3 in number, now 2 given Neil Keenan is dead. Ben has good connections to bloodlines and Agencies, but this White Dragon group does not exist in the format described. It is not a white hat or helmet for that matter, those are/where agency created groups to follow and be distracted by. Many have claimed to be the archetype of the White Dragon and prophecies made that, that person or being will be revealed after he removes the Red Dragon from existence. Which to my understanding was done around the 2013 time. Ben said that the Avatar of Marduk, if there is one is called the white dragon. If Marduk has an avatar then this group will know who that is, due to a lack of self-work by the host, a chip off the old block so to speak. That person is being heavily monitored and will be dealt with by the higher forces, should that be the case. Marduk himself was removed in 2016-2017 time period and will not be returning here.

This next week marks the great solar eclipse event in America on April 8th. The amount of fear portrayed by the alt media characters becomes indicative of their connections to the Intelligence Agencies. There is no fear on behalf of we the people, the fear is endemic to them only. Those who wish for the gods to return, from Marduk to Apophis to Ra, I can assure you that is not happening Monday or any other day. Ra and Apophis are both serpent race people and whilst Ra was the imposter solar god here for a while, he has been replaced and will not be returning. Apophis waged war on Ra for the solar title for some time, that failed and again that will be a fruitless pursuit. The NASA rockets being fired called Apophis will not have its intended purpose to the event also, it may provide a nice firework show though. CERN in Switzerland will not be firing up for its true purpose ever again, so we can ignore that fear based alt media jollification as well. CERN may well use or interact with HAARP, but a different harp has taken hold and playing sweet music. The clowns may try, they have tried since 2012 when their timeline changed, as always it will fail and the people will prevail on this planet ultimately.

Let them ooze their fears everywhere, it is kind of fun to watch and chuckle. But for us it is about staying in observation mode and not absorbing their fears. Enjoy the event and embrace the energies it provides. It is time for the love frequency not the fear frequency. The event will be a joy to watch for all within the path, soak up the high vibes and relax knowing all is well. Set good intentions for the duration of the eclipse, no matter which location you are in, on this planet. Tune into the frequencies and just let it flow through you.
