

NEWS:

The US Secret Service has deep flaws that need to be resolved urgently, or more assassination attempts like the one at Donald Trump's rally will happen again, a damning report says.

In the report, which was drafted by state and national law enforcement officials, the panel praised the agents who risk their lives to protect many of the country's highest-ranking officials but noted several leadership and cultural failures.

These included a troubling lack of critical thinking among staff and a reluctance to speak up.

Indeed, how can you have an IQ of 140 to be a CIA agent and not have critical thinking?

As for speaking up, like the lack of critical thinking, that is a society problem, not just an agency problem.

The agency's issues, the report said, were systemic or cultural and it called for fundamental reform including removing some of its top leadership as soon as possible.

Without that reform another Butler can and will happen again, the panel wrote to Department of Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas, who oversees the organization.

All very Blueprint that I have to say.

All the agencies have to be scrapped entirely, have teams go in and find all the corruption, fraud and treasonous activities.

Select the best or least corrupted agents to be housed into just 3 agencies, A domestic agency, an international agency and a cyber agency.

That is all we need.

President-elect Donald Trump has named Republican Congresswoman Elise Stefanik to serve as the US ambassador to the United Nations. A longtime Trump ally, Stefanik is a staunch supporter of Israel and has also been critical of the UN for what she argues is a lack of sufficient backing for its war against Hamas.

She was also born in New York.

Elise is an incredibly strong, tough, and smart America First fighter, Trump said in a statement confirming the first cabinet pick of his second term.

Oh dear, not more pro-Israeli warmongering goons.

Not a good start.

Netanyahu goes about firing more people close to him as the desperation begins to set in within Israel.

Their economy is collapsing, ports are closed and many businesses have closed also, as reported in an earlier show.

We've known for months that there is no love lost between Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his now former Defense Minister, Yoav Gallant.

But this year, there have been reports of stand-up rows and shouting matches between the two men over Israel's war strategy.

Gallant has vastly more military experience than Netanyahu.

He began his career as a navy commando in 1977 and rose to be a major general in Israel's Southern Command, overseeing two wars in Gaza between 2005 and 2010.

The suspicion is that Gallant's military superiority and respect from within the armed forces grated with his boss.

In Israel's hardline government, the most right-wing in the country's history, Gallant was less hawkish than some of his fellow ministers.

But he was no dove.

After Hamas's 7 October 2023 attack on Israel, the country's biggest ever military humiliation, Gallant was initially fully behind the war in Gaza.

Along with Netanyahu, he faces possible war crimes charges at the International Criminal Court.

Both men rejected the allegations made by the ICC's prosecutor when he sought warrants for them in May.

But in recent months as defense minister, Gallant argued that Israel's government should prioritize a hostage release deal with Hamas and end the war in Gaza.

Except Netanyahu and his murderous cronies have no interest in the hostages, they are just the collateral to fulfill a much larger agenda.

There have been rumors for months that he was on the verge of being sacked.

He has been sacked as defense minister once before, back in March 2023.

On that occasion, along with many high-ranking military and former military officials, he was unhappy with Netanyahu's controversial plans to overhaul the judicial system.

His dismissal led to tens of thousands of Israelis taking to the streets calling for him to be reinstated.

After just a few days, Netanyahu was forced to back down and return Gallant to his position.

On Tuesday night, as news broke that he had been sacked again, there were again protests in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, but not on the same scale.

They are destroying Israel from within with their ouroboros policies, only a matter of time now before the hammer comes down on that fake State.

If you had any doubts about THI and its reporting of Israel previously, then this piece will confirm everything I have revealed.

After more than a month of blocking food and aid amid nonstop bombing, the Israel Defense Forces delivered another devastating mandate, declaring it will not allow Palestinians to return to northern Gaza, despite it being a Palestinian territory. Like we have said all along, this is not a war against Hamas, this is a hostile takeover and landgrab of a country. The IDF Brig Gen Itzik Cohen told Israeli reporters during a media briefing on Tuesday that forces are nearing the complete evacuation of northern Gaza, and there is no intention of allowing the residents of the northern Gaza Strip to return to their homes. Cohen said the order is necessary because Hamas has regrouped in the area, forcing the Israeli military to enter some areas twice. Utter rubbish and pure pro pagan da, Hamas is a ruse, they were funded by Qatar at the request of Netanyahu in 2019. They are a created boogeyman to justify not a war, but a genocidal land grab by any means necessary. He added Israeli forces will continue blocking humanitarian aid from entering the north, since there are no more civilians left, but they will allow it to enter regularly in the south. Anyone who remains in northern Gaza will be treated as a combatant.

Describing people on their own land and homes as a combatant is a war crime, when are authorities going to take action? Are you afraid of sanctions or retribution by the US? I get that, but ultimately this axis of evil will eventually come round to taking over your lands as well. Nip it in the bud now, or face your own consequences of inactions later. Last month, 400,000 were unable or unwilling to evacuate northern Gaza, according to the UN. However, it is unclear how many remain today, as Israel has continued nonstop carpet bombing, including hospitals and schools, since the beginning of October. Residents in northern Gaza stated the latest operation has created the worst conditions to date. International humanitarian law experts have declared Israel is committing war crimes by forcing Palestinians to leave their territory and weaponizing food. Social media slammed Israel for devastating the area and ethnically cleansing what was once the largest city in the State of Palestine. At least 45,000 Palestinians have been killed and more than 100,000 have been injured since the Israel-Palestine conflict escalated on Oct. 7, 2023, according to Gaza's Ministry of Health. It cannot get any more obvious at this point and the world needs to wake up to a reality that this planet is being taken over by one race, at the expense of all others.

There was an incident in Holland last week at a football match where violence took place in somewhat fairly small pockets. That is not unusual in Holland and it rarely makes the headlines, unless full disorder takes place. But it did get reported this time, why? Because it involved the ever so treasured Israelis being attacked by Dutch supporters. All the media jumped on it hailing it as antisemitism again and one wonders whether those Israeli supporters were actors, all designed to create news in favor of one group and to run the pity party tactics again. I don't and never will condone violence of this sort, but it became inevitable that the Jewish people, as they have always done, suffer abuse and being targeted, because they failed to stop their own country in countless genocides based upon some fake books. THI warned as far back as 6 years ago for the Israelis to wake up to the reality, that those who operate in their name will ultimately delete them as well. The world will eventually turn against all Jews, as more and more of the atrocities are committed by those who go under the banner of Jewish. The only people who will save the Jews then is, empathic goyim as they call us. A few days later came in a report to confirm my suspicions this was another staged pity party event. As it emerged there was Mossad agents within the Israeli supporters who were provoking the Dutch before the violence ensued. This is how the Jewish mafia media works, right in your face designing scenes for pro pagan da purpose all to favor one race. It is high time more people see it for what it is.

Yet more firing of American employees for having the audacity to speak out against genocide. Microsoft has fired two employees who organized an unauthorized vigil at the company's headquarters for Palestinians killed in Gaza during Israel's war with Hamas. The two employees told The Associated Press they were fired by phone call, several hours after a lunchtime event they organized at Microsoft's campus in Redmond, Washington. Both employees were members of a coalition of employees called No Azure for Apartheid, that has opposed Microsoft's sale of its cloud-computing technology to the Israeli government. But they contended that Thursday's event was similar to other Microsoft-sanctioned employee gift campaigns for people in need. You see in their world only those favorable to Israel and Jews are allowed, which means they are racist. But it doesn't end there as Go-ogle got in on the act as well.

Dozens of workers have been sacked by the tech giant for speaking up for Palestinians against Project Nimbus, but others say they won't be silenced. The three Googlers unfurl their banners and begin chanting to demand that Google do one thing: Drop Project Nimbus.

But this will be the last time they sit inside Google's New York office as Googlers, as Google itself refers to its own employees. Getting fired felt like a possibility but never a reality, remarked Montes, one of 50 employees fired by Google for staging a 10-hour sit-in at one of its American offices in April.

For the last three years, Montes has been one of several activists calling for Google to drop Project Nimbus, a partnership Google and Amazon have with the Israeli government reportedly worth $1.2bn.

The partnership, which focuses on cloud computing, provides services to various branches of the Israeli government, including the defense ministry and the army.

But some employees say they have been met with an intense crackdown from Google, which they say has denied claims by activists, that its technology has been involved or played a role in Israel's brutal campaign in Gaza and ongoing occupation, deemed illegal by the International Court of Justice - of the West Bank.

The mass firings marked a turning point for the company as it grappled with an internal battle among its employees over the war in Gaza. Just shameful in a country that states is a democracy and has an amendment about free speech, unless of course you talk badly about Israel, then all rules and laws are broken for their benefit only.

Another internet platform being exposed as an Israeli pro pagan da front is Jewtube.

YouTube taking money from Israel to run propaganda adverts were ignored by the YouTube leadership.

Also why Google was taking money from the Israeli government to run propaganda adverts, after the 7 October attacks, against the UN Relief and Works Agency (Unrwa), the United Nations agency that provides support for Palestinian refugees.

Ten days after the 7 October attacks by Hamas into southern Israel, or the staged Mossad attacks more likely, Google's CEO Sundar Pichai told his employees in an email that the company planned to donate $8 million to support relief efforts in Israel and Gaza.

The amount of money and resources being poured into that fake State is beyond staggering.

And for what purpose? Peace? Forget it, Transparency? Forget it, safety and security for the people? Forget it.

It is all being poured into Is RA EL for global domination only, of which they wish to kill most of the goyim off, no ifs or buts, that is the reality.

Yet more warnings of the dastardly deeds of those who operate the major platforms of the internet.

Internet censorship tactics are happening on a grand scale in secrecy.

The establishment is scrubbing internet archives across numerous platforms in an attempt to reframe public opinion and ultimately rewrite history.

Well I never, I warned of that two decades ago with the Go-ogle search engine.

Archive.org has been tracking websites since 1994, but recently, it has stopped collecting data in real-time.

The website stopped archiving on October 8, 2024, with a curious explanation: Archive.org faced a Denial of Service attack (DDOS) that nearly wiped it out.

Who would be targeting such a service?

The platform released the following message:

Last week, along with a DDOS attack and exposure of patron email addresses and encrypted passwords, the Internet Archive's website JavaScript was defaced, leading us to bring the site down to access and improve our security.

The safety and security tactic again, no it means the archive is being rejigged and much of it will go missing.

Why? Because more and more people are now researching in the past archives for details on various topics.

As the masses are beginning to realize those conspiracy nuts were right all along, hence delete the archives.

The stored data of the Internet Archive is safe and we are working on resuming services safely.

This new reality requires heightened attention to cyber security and we are responding.

We apologize for the impact of these library services being unavailable.

A librarian for the organization said that they expect the service to be restored but was unable to provide details.

While the Wayback Machine has been in read-only mode, web crawling and archiving have continued.

Those materials will be available via the Wayback Machine as services are secured.

This means that individual websites may scrub content from their site without any third-party having the ability to capture it.

Like I said, a giant cover up.

This is an interesting call out and suggests there is now a split between the House of Saud and Israel.

Which could be part of the factions war or perhaps the Saudis now realize that Greater Israel takes over ½ of their lands as well.

Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman has condemned Israel's actions in Gaza as genocide, in some of the harshest public criticism of the country by a Saudi official since the start of the war.

Speaking at a summit of Muslim and Arab leaders the prince also criticized Israeli attacks on Lebanon and Iran.

In a sign of improving ties between rivals Riyadh and Tehran, he warned Israel against launching attacks on Iranian soil. Saudi's de facto leader was joined by other leaders present in calling for a total Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza.

Meanwhile, Saudi Arabia's foreign minister said it was a failing of the international community that the war in Gaza had not been stopped, accusing Israel of causing starvation in the territory. Prince Faisal Bin Farhan Al-Saud said: Where the international community primarily has failed is ending the immediate conflict and putting an end to Israel's aggression. Good to hear as more are now turning against this rogue State that is a blight upon the whole planet.

Trump is coming into the Presidency allegedly on what is called Agenda 47 and in it, it declares the following. President Trump's plan to dismantle the Deep State and return power to the American people is the headline. Wherein he declared: I will shatter the Deep State, and restore to a Government that is controlled by the people. All of which sounds very good at this point, but we have heard this before in 2016 through 2020 and nothing unfolded, despite repeated hints and clues by the Q movement. Trump of course was supported heavily by the Trustee and myself in a supporting role during those 4 years and failed to implement anything significant.

Some of the solutions in the Blueprint were given to Trump for support. This time we are told by the incoming President Trump, he has vowed to:

1. On Day One, re-issue 2020 Executive Order restoring the President's authority to fire rogue bureaucrats.
2. Overhaul Federal Departments and Agencies, firing all of the corrupt actors in our National Security and in our Intelligence apparatus.
3. Fundamentally reform the FISA courts, ensuring that corruption is rooted out. (FISA = United States Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court)
4. Establish a Truth and Reconciliation Commission to declassify and publish all documents on Deep State spying, censorship, and abuses of power.
5. Launch a major crackdown on government leakers who collude with the media to create false narratives, pressing criminal charges when appropriate.
6. Make every Inspector General's Office independent from the Departments that they oversee, so that they do not become protectors of the Deep State.
7. Establish an independent auditing system to continually monitor our Intelligence Agencies to ensure that they are not spying on our citizens or running disinformation campaigns against the American people.
8. Continue Trump administration effort to move parts of the federal bureaucracy outside of the Washington Swamp. Just like he moved the Bureau of Land Management to Colorado. Up to 100,000 government positions could be moved out of Washington.
9. Ban Federal Bureaucrats from taking jobs at the Companies they deal with and regulate, such as Big Pharma.
10. Push for a constitutional amendment to impose term limits on Members of Congress.

Interesting stuff and does run concurrent with our Blueprint solutions. It remains to be seen whether this is window dressing or will he carry out the full purge that is required. I have always said that I do not care who is the President, as long as they carry the necessary requirements to restore this country for the benefit of the people. Time as always will tell, but if he carries out the above I will applaud him as it is the right thing to start off with. Although I wish he had added the details I gave to him back in 2018 of how to shut down all of the media and fully change the way they operate. The question remains after we had 4-5 years of promises by Trump and his entourage and he delivered nothing. I guess hopium sells well it seems with the masses. As always I will keep an open mind and heart and see if anything develops this time.

As the US and it's puppet state South Korea are creating instability in the region to provoke N. Korea. Kim Jong Un issued a stark warning to S. Korea that should they not stop the antagonism, they will go to war against and wipe S. Korea off of the map altogether. He stated they do not want war, but if provoked much further they will unleash it. This would pull the US in, which is likely a strategic financial goal. By that I mean the bankers and the MIC will generate more income in the event of a conflict. America's sole export is weaponry and little else and with BRICS countries moving away from American deals, war would be the only generator of funds.

For those in the Military and the American people should know, that in the event of a war with N. Korea, America lost every time they ran the war simulator.

The US Military officials needs to change thinking patterns rapidly now, the party of dominance and unlimited monies is over. It is not coming back and we need to reshape and redesign America in a much different light now. And the only way to do that is The Blueprint.

MEDICAL SECTION:

There is a rumor that the top 5 CEO's of pharmaceutical companies have arranged an emergency meeting in the past week. They are said to be in a state of panic.

In a past show we covered some of the Gavi Alliance tricks and crying like babies as people no longer believe them to be of any use and worse are operating against us.

Gavi Alliance are a Swiss-based medical corporation who were heavily involved in the Covid scam.

But here is an example of trying to counteract the narrative built up by the anti-vaxxers.

Quoting the Media Manipulation Casebook, the article defined "meme war" as the propagation of memes for political persuasion or community building, or to strategically spread narratives and other messaging crucial to a media manipulation campaign.

The authors identified three recurring themes in the memes encouraging vaccine refusal:

1. The government and social institutions are corrupt, politically compromised and tyrannical and are using unsafe and ineffective vaccines for surveillance, control and profit.
2. Unvaccinated people are unfairly stigmatized and persecuted, subject to Nazi-like sanctions and social exclusion.
3. The vaccinated are morally and physically inferior to the unvaccinated, for example, they suffer from reduced fertility and critical thinking ability.

But the most sinister element of the meme campaigns, according to the article, was to profit financially from pandemic anxieties, including promoting potentially harmful and unapproved health treatments like hydroxychloroquine and ivermectin.

The authors did not explain how a person could make a living from selling inexpensive unpatented medicines, nor did they compare this claim to the profits made by companies peddling remdesivir or Covid-19 vaccines.

In conclusion, under the protective guise of humor and satire that can evade fact checkers and content moderators, meme propagators build their online following, sow distrust of health authorities, and profit from the promotion of unapproved medicines.

I guess the dissenting author forgot to check just how many billions each pharmaceutical company involved in Covid made during the pre-planned plandemic.

So the researcher checked their facts, the MSM, Gavi and various social media platforms don't.

People aren't buying what they're selling.

Laura Bono, vice president of Children's Health Defense (CHD), told The Defender, Evidently, Gavi is missing the irony of publishing an article on the spread of vaccine misinformation, when Gavi is one of the most prolific purveyors of pro-vaccine propaganda in the world.

Exactly.

Gavi, funded by a total of $4.1 billion since 2000 by its founding partner the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, has a long history of pushing vaccines in developing countries in Africa without adequate informed consent over the risks.

Gavi recently launched an anti-malarial vaccine campaign for babies throughout Africa, which is targeting millions of girls in low and middle-income countries worldwide with a human papillomavirus (HPV) vaccine.

Bono said that Gavi and other Pharma-backed organizations are grappling with the fact that parents around the globe are waking up to the serious risks posed by vaccines, including autism, and that increasing numbers of people aren't buying what they're selling.

It's ironic that Gavi is forced to go down this path, they clearly feel threatened, said C. H. Klotz, editor of Canary In a Covid World: How Propaganda and Censorship Changed Our (My) World.

He continued, little do they know that the people are not stupid, despite the propaganda.

Yes they thought we were all docile bots like the masses, wrong thinking and underestimated the number who would not buy into their program.

According to Klotz, more people became aware of propaganda through their experience with Covid-19, where we were told one thing and the opposite happened.

For example, Get vaccinated to stop transmission and to protect yourself from ever contracting the virus again.

That all turned out to be a big lie, he said.

Mark Crispin Miller, professor of media, culture and communication at New York University (NYU), said that Gavi is using the article to attack others for doing precisely what the propagandists have themselves been doing, pushing and profiting from unproven medicines.

Just like the agencies, accuse others of doing what they are doing, same program.

This projective tactic is exquisitely disarming and confusing to anyone who doesn't know the truth, since it defines the honest ones as liars and the mighty liars themselves as founts of truth, Miller said.

Miller explained how this is typical of all war propaganda:

Big Pharma and its cohorts are playing the same head-game played by the Nazis and the Bolsheviks and by various 'democratic' propagandists in times of war, which includes political campaigns as well as armed conflicts.

It's been called, aptly, accusation in a mirror, or sometimes, mirror politics.

Interesting as to how that wording comes out now, after I stated all people's mirrors are up and out now, the collective consciousness again in full flow?

According to the Dangerous Speech Project, funded in part by George Soros' Open Society Foundations, the accusation in a mirror tactic asserts, that the audience faces serious and often mortal threats from the target group, for example, reversing reality by suggesting that the victims of a genocide will instead commit it.

The Hutu people used this tactic against the Tutsi people in the 1994 Rwandan genocide, accusing their intended victims of the very crimes they planned to commit against them.

Conveniently they left out the greatest example of the Jews in the concentration camps, placed there by the Jews running the SS.

The same Jews that destroyed Russia and 90M people, both whilst crying they were the victims.

According to Miller, whoever engages in this tactic takes us into the same nightmare world that George Orwell invokes in his book, 1984, where War is peace, freedom is slavery, ignorance is strength.

You can add to that, fact is fiction and fiction is fact.

Miller was censured by members of his department at NYU for attempting to teach his students in a course on propaganda, about government and Pharma industry propaganda deployed during the pandemic.

They can't handle the truth is why and it exposes who runs the lies.

Criminalizing memes?

Reclaim the Net, picking up on the theme of an impending battle, said Gavi's post was a call to action to formally criminalize memes, citing the article's claim that meme creators evade responsibility for any negative consequences of their messaging.

Isn't it funny that the MSM is not held to the same standards is it not? How have they been allowed to cite propaganda and often pure lies, yet never has their creators accepted their responsibility?

Klotz agreed this could signal a further offensive by Big Pharma and its allies against misinformation spreaders.

It can only be established as misinformation when the evidence contrary is proven to supersede the claims, until then it is information only.

The barrage of censorship and propaganda has been relentless since 2020, I see no reason why it would let up now, Koltz said.

The new battleground is to control our hearts and minds.

The authors claimed that anti-vaccination media influencers are already a discredited group, without acknowledging the propaganda machinery that labeled them that way in the first place.

They blamed this group for raising well-documented issues: ineffective vaccines that fail to stop infection or transmission; vaccine-related injuries and effects on fertility; suppression of viable therapeutics; exposure to harmful (often fatal) hospital Covid-19 protocols; loss of jobs (and in the military, loss of seniority, pensions); revocation of medical licenses; character assassination; lack of evidence for masking; vaccine passports and surveillance schemes.

The authors focused on extreme instances of satirical memes found on the internet to invalidate any of these concerns, but failed to engage on the substance of the underlying arguments.

They claimed the creators of the memes were motivated by profit and political advantage.

Mirror politics and accusations again.

The co-authors, Stephanie Alice Baker, Ph.D., senior lecturer in sociology at City, University of London, England, and Michael James Walsh, Ph.D., associate professor in social sciences, University of Canberra, Australia, co-wrote Memes Save Lives:

Baker and Walsh did not identify a single misinformation spreader in their research article, claiming they did not want to: 1. amplify the visibility of bad actors; 2. perpetuate a false equivalence between the treatment of unvaccinated groups and groups genuinely persecuted; or 3. become the targets of networked harassment.

1. That means they predetermined that people who research and question things are bad actors.
2. The treatment of the unvaccinated was appalling throughout Covid and they were persecuted.
3. They were frightened of becoming the targets of networked harassment, oh my – then stop writing utter shit then, it is that simple.

All whilst forgetting they are adding to the networked harassment of the medical junta and control system, against people who chose to exercise their free will right to not get vaccinated, not wear masks and not social distance.

The people who did that have been exonerated on every level since, lowest disease, lowest death rates and kept their dignity.

The same cannot be said for those advocating for the jabs or those who took them.

The silver lining to it all is: A: the people are questioning all authority now B: they are no longer accepting the drivel and lies spat out by the MSM and C: people are exercising their rights and sovereignty.

SOCIETY SECTION:

Finally companies who got hit in the pocket for ridiculous divisive programs are starting to roll them back.

Boeing has reportedly nixed its global diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) department.

The aerospace company's news was reported in late October.

Boeing's DEI employees will merge into a human resources team concentrated on talent and the employee experience.

In a statement, the aerospace company said, Boeing remains committed to recruiting and retaining top talent and creating an inclusive work environment, where every teammate around the world can perform at their best while supporting the company's mission.

Hopefully more will follow as that diversity program has not worked, and has been very divisive and an anti-white program.

As one program winds down another is being promoted in America, that originates from the US puppet state of South Korea.

This piece defies belief, but I never underestimate the people's ability to be totally retarded these days.

After President-elect Donald Trump's victory against Vice President Kamala Harris in the 2024 presidential election was driven in part by young male voters, some are calling for the use of South Korea's "4B Movement" in the United States.

The presidential election was seen by many as a referendum on women's rights.

Trump has been found liable for sexual abuse and defamation, and his vice president, former Ohio senator JD Vance, has previously referred to some women as childless cat ladies.

The Harris campaign also ran on a platform of supporting a woman's right to abortion, something that has been jeopardized in many states after the fall of Supreme Court decision Roe v. Wade, which Trump has taken credit for.

Now, some women are swearing to abide by the code of the 4B movement, a South Korean feminist approach that swears off men.

What is the 4B movement?

In short, the 4B movement is a vow to swear off men.

It is called the 4B movement because in Korean, the four tenets each begin with bi, which means no, according to a paper published by two South Korean researchers at Yonsei University's Institute of Humanities.

The movement specifically calls for the refusal of dating men (biyeonae), sexual relationships with men (bisekseu), heterosexual marriage (bihon), and childbirth (bichulsan) in response to what South Korean women see as a patriarchal and misogynistic culture.

The movement is also known as the 4 No's.

The 4B movement began in 2017 and gained more attention in 2019, amid a #MeToo-style reckoning in South Korea.

Much of the movement has been built online, where participants call themselves anonymous women and share few personal details.

It has no official leadership structure.

Just mindboggling the lengths people will go to prove how stupid they are.

What is lost on these divisive people is, without men these people wouldn't exist to be that stupid.

No sex with men equals no childbirth, do these people not think? Clearly not.

If you wish to be a lesbian, just get on with it and leave other women and men alone and away from your rank stupidity.

These people are a complete waste of life force energy.

There is a new technology to be added to phones that is stated as for your security, well we should all know by now how that turns out.

The new technology will automatically lock the screen if a phone is snatched, which Google says could help curb thefts.

Users will need to activate these new features on their phone settings to feel the benefit as they are disabled by default.

The new update to Android devices works by using AI and sensors to identify when a thief has grabbed and fled with a user's phone, and will lock the screen to prevent them accessing it or any data stored on it.

A Remote Lock feature will also lock a lost or stolen device using just the phone number.

Google said these new features may help users who cannot remember their password or other credentials in the moments after a theft, but still need to secure their personal data.

Tyler added: I actually think this new technology is quite good, because when my phone got stolen I was unable to actually remote lock my phone, and I really struggled because I couldn't remember my password at the time.

So when I got access to the internet, I couldn't lock my phone because I didn't remember my password.

I was flustered and I (had) updated my password about six months ago so with Google's new initiative, where they only need your mobile number, I think that's a good way to lock phones.

You do realize Tyler is just an actor spinning the notion you will be safer with this?

But what if this lock feature is a test for a future lock of your phone?

Do people think of these things? No.

What if the authorities decide you are using your phone in an anti-government or activist way, then they lock your phone as you will now have the remote lock feature.

See how it works?

Phone snatching is a modern crime wave, 69% of all thefts in London last year were related to mobile phones.

New figures show that mobile phone crime is driving the rise in robberies and thefts in the capital, with 33% of all robberies last year involving a phone being stolen, equating to more than 11,800 offences.

The new security update has also been welcomed by the Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, who said he lobbied mobile phone companies last year to ensure their devices were not appealing to thieves.

Mr. Khan added that Metropolitan Police were also taking targeted action with patrols in London's worst hotspots to curb the problem.

Problem, reaction and solution in full action with this piece.

EXPOSE:

We have all heard of the term diaspora, why? Because it is related to the Jews in the main.

But contrary to popular opinion the Jews are not the only diaspora globally, due to many past wars and people having to move for food or greater security.

When the Rus spread out, that was the original diaspora as they spread out across the world without the use of violence.

The migration from Da Arya was a diaspora as well.

We also heard about several Slavic/Aryan/Rus tribes having to move across Europe and into Scandinavia, with the Skandas people creating the name of that region.

The planet at various times was an empty canvas, waiting to be filled with the brushstrokes of the people.

So what is the definition of a diaspora?

A diaspora is a population that is scattered across regions which are separate from its geographic place of origin.

The word is used in reference to people who identify with a specific geographic location, but currently reside elsewhere.

Notable diasporic populations include the Jewish diaspora formed after the Babylonian exile; Assyrian–Chaldean–Syriac diaspora following the Assyrian genocide; Greeks that fled or were displaced following the fall of Constantinople and the later Greek genocide, as well as the Istanbul pogroms.

The emigration of Anglo-Saxons (primarily to the Byzantine Empire) after the Norman Conquest of England; the southern Chinese and Indians who left their homelands during the 19th and 20th centuries; the Irish diaspora after the Great Famine; the Scottish diaspora that developed on a large scale after the Highland and Lowland Clearances; Romani from the Indian subcontinent; the Italian diaspora and the Mexican diaspora; Circassians in the aftermath of the Circassian genocide; the Palestinian diaspora due to the Israeli–Palestinian conflict; interesting the report say conflict, yet genocide for many of the other diasporas.

The Armenian diaspora following the Armenian genocide; the Lebanese diaspora due to the Lebanese civil war; and Syrians due to the Syrian civil war.

The Palestine, Armenian, Lebanon and Syria wars all involved the Jews attacking other countries.

Given the description of a diaspora, I cannot see how Jews are classed as a diaspora to begin with, as they had no country until the Jewish Elite created one in 1948.

Given their genetic coding, if they did have a homeland it would be India or other South Asian place, as that is where they originated from.

They were never traditionally in the Middle East until they were thrown out of India and sent to Egypt.

According to a 2019 United Nations report, the Indian diaspora is the world's largest diaspora, with a population of 17.5 million, followed by the Mexican diaspora, with a population of 11.8 million, and the Chinese diaspora, with a population of 10.7 million.

In overview given we were granted equal rights to all of the planet, how can a diaspora actually exist?

It exists because they wanted certain rights to certain regions and they used the people to control those regions.

Get the people to believe this is your land only and you have to fight invaders at all costs.

Which is fair enough in most cases, but the alien invaders wanted everyone's land to themselves and again used the people to drive their agendas.

Etymology:

The term diaspora is a Greek word, composed of the words Δίαζ (God Zeus), and σπορά • (sporá) of sowing of seed like Zeus Georgos the seminator.

To sow, spread or propagate the seed which is related to semen.

So this was a Cosmic Genetics word and program in essence, of sowing the alien seed amongst the populace and then spreading out.

Interestingly the word seminator was removed from all languages in the 1600's.

The diaspora of sub-Saharan Africans during the Atlantic slave trade is one of the most notorious modern diasporas.

10.7 million people from West Africa survived transportation to arrive in the Americas as slaves starting in the late 16th century CE and continuing into the 19th.

Yet our Part 9 show of FHSTOS showed minimal blacks in America and there is little to no evidence of this mass migration into Central or Southern Americas either.

The only places left that housed many black slaves would be the islands like the Bahamas, Jamaica and West Indies, but not 10.7M.

Where are the records to support that amount of slave trading? Well according to the black researcher Dane Calloway who went into great detail into the archives, there was no evidence supporting the mass migration of black slaves.

In fact he claimed that 98% of blacks in America are indigenous people, not Africans.

For the record one slave traded person is too many, but the figures have been inflated for a guilt and shame program and blamed on one race, when all evidence points to the Jewish and the black warlords in Africa being the drivers of the slave trade.

The two most prominent in Africa in the last 5-600 years was Cecil Rhodes and the House of Orange Rothschild's, both were/are Jewish.

Outside of the Atlantic slave trade, however, African diasporic communities have existed for millennia.

While some communities were slave-based, other groups emigrated for various reasons.

The "Egyptians" were transporting slaves from Africa via The East Africa slave trading company at least 3k years back, and possibly much further back than that.

From the 8th through the 19th centuries, the Arab slave trade dispersed millions of Africans to Asia and the islands of the Indian Ocean.

The Islamic slave trade also has resulted in the creation of communities of African descent in India, most notably the Siddi, Makrani and Sri Lanka Kaffirs.

Sri Lankan Kaffirs is interesting as that is a derogatory term used in South Africa for blacks.

It is said that the original Kaffirs were the Zulus of Natal.

Beginning as early as the 2nd century AD, the kingdom of Aksum (modern-day Ethiopia) created colonies on the Arabian Peninsula.

That was the Jews having been chased to that region in the past to deliver their 4th Garden of Eden.

During the 4th century, Aksum formally adopted Christianity as a state religion, becoming the first to do so along with Armenia.

Which confirms Christianity is a front for the Jews.

In the 6th century, Kaleb of Axum invaded Himyar (modern-day Yemen) to aid and defend Christians under religious persecution.

During these campaigns, several groups of soldiers chose not to return to Aksum.

These groups are estimated to have ranged in size from the 600s to mid-3000s.

That sounds like another created war said to be for the safety and security again, when it appears to be another opportunity to move troops and people in there for another diaspora or settlement.

It should be noted that all these slavery trades took place long before the so-called white man arrived in Africa, like hundreds to thousands of years before the Jewish, not white slave ships arrived.

Previously, migrant Africans with national African passports could only enter thirteen African countries without advanced visas.

In pursuing a unified future, the African Union (AU) launched an African Union Passport in July 2016, allowing people with a passport from one of the 55 member states of the AU, to move freely between these countries under this visa free passport and encourage migrants with national African passports to return to Africa.

But who imposed on the African people that they couldn't travel their own country without Nazi style papers?

Has the 2016 ruling brought about a change? It appears not.

Africa's richest man Aliko Dangote has said he needs 38 visas to travel within the continent on his Nigerian passport.

Many European nationals, meanwhile, waltz into most African countries visa-free.

African nations were supposed to scrap visa requirements for all African citizens by 2018.

It was a key part of the African Union (AU) vision and roadmap for the next 50 years that was adopted by all member states in 2013.

But to date, the Seychelles is the only nation where visa-free travel is open to all Africans, as well as to citizens of every nation, as it always has been.

A recent AU report found that Africans can travel without a visa to just 22% of other African countries.

It is a sensitive topic, provoking xenophobic attitudes in some of Africa's wealthier nations despite policymakers from Cape to Cairo insisting that the free movement of people is key for economic transformation.

Africa is xenophobic? Oh my, the rest of the world doesn't get to hear about that form of racism, does it?

This is where and why the black population needs to address their own home truths before denigrating other races.

It should be remembered that not only did slavery begin in Africa and was done by Africans, they also introduced the lynching and being burnt alive with a burning tyre placed around the waist.

That did not originate via the clown based group called the Ku Klux Klan.

South Africa appears to be the most visible representative of the continent's visa double standard, remaining largely closed to other Africans but more welcoming to the wider world.

Citizens of only 15 African nations can travel to South Africa without a visa, yet holders of 28 different European passports can enter the country freely.

European history contains numerous diaspora-like events.

In ancient times, the trading and colonizing activities of the Greek tribes from the Balkans and Asia Minor spread people of Greek culture, religion and language around the Mediterranean and Black Sea basins, establishing Greek city-states in southern Italy, the so-called Magna Graecia, meaning Greater Greece.

Just like Magna Carta then, which meant the Great Charter or Cartel, but then you have another familiar term coming from the word charterparty, which means maritime law.

Other Greek diasporas were northern Libya, eastern Spain, the south of France, and the Black Sea coasts.

Greeks founded more than 400 colonies.

Tyre and Carthage also colonized the Mediterranean.

Alexander the Great's the conquest of the Achaemenid Empire marked the beginning of the Hellenistic period, characterized by a new wave of Greek colonization in Asia and Africa, with Greek ruling classes established in Egypt, southwest Asia and northwest India.

Subsequent waves of colonization and migration during the Middle Ages added to the older settlements or created new ones, thus replenishing the Greek diaspora and making it one of the most long-standing and widespread in the world.

The Romans also established numerous colonies and settlements outside of Rome and throughout the Roman empire.

The Migration-Period relocations, which included several phases, are just one set of many in history.

The first phase Migration-Period displacement (between 300 and 500 AD) included relocation of the Goths, which were the Ostrogoths and Visigoths, Vandals, Franks, various other Germanic peoples like Burgundians, Lombards, Angles, Saxons, Jutes, Suebi and Alemanni, Alans and numerous Slavic tribes.

The second phase, between 500 and 900 AD, saw Slavic, Turkic, and other tribes on the move, resettling in Eastern Europe and gradually leaving it predominantly Slavic, and affecting Anatolia and the Caucasus as the first Turkic tribes of the Avars, Huns, Khazars, Pechenegs, as well as Bulgars, and possibly Magyars arrived.

The last phase of the migrations saw the coming of the Hungarian Magyars.

The Viking expansion out of Scandinavia into southern and eastern Europe, Iceland, the British Isles and Greenland.

The recent application of the word "diaspora" to the Viking lexicon, highlights their cultural profile distinct from their predatory reputation in the regions they settled, especially in the North Atlantic.

The more positive connotations associated with the social science term, help to view the movement of the Scandinavian peoples in the Viking Age in a new way.

You will only do that when you realize the Scandinavians are the Slavs/Rus and Aryans.

Such colonizing migrations cannot be considered indefinitely as diasporas; over very long periods, eventually, the migrants assimilate into the settled area so completely, that it becomes their new mental homeland.

Thus the modern Magyars of Hungary do not feel that they belong in the Western Siberia that the Hungarian Magyars left 12 centuries ago; and the English descendants of the Angles, Saxons and Jutes do not yearn to reoccupy the plains of Northwest Germany.

In 1492 a Spanish-financed expedition headed by Christopher Columbus arrived in the Americas, after which European exploration and colonization rapidly expanded.

Except it wasn't Spanish funded or a Spanish conquest, but the Sephardic Jews of which Columbus was one of them expanding their territory and finding a new home.

Historian James Axtell estimates that 240,000 people left Europe for the Americas in the 16th century.

Emigration continued, in the 19th century alone over 50 million Europeans migrated to North and South America.

Most of them were white slaves, including young children from Ireland and Eastern Europe.

Other Europeans moved to Siberia, Africa, and Australasia.

The properly Spanish emigrants were mainly from several parts of Spain, but not only the impoverished ones like the Basques in Chile, and the destination varied also along the time.

As an example, the Galicians moved first to the American colonies during the 17-20th century mainly, but not only Mexico, Cuba, Argentina and Venezuela, as many writers during the Francoist exile, but later to Europe France and Switzerland and finally within Spain to Madrid, Catalonia or the Basque Country.

A specific 19th-century example is the Irish diaspora, beginning in the mid-19th century and brought about by an Gorta Mór or the Great Hunger of the Irish Famine.

An estimated 45% to 85% of Ireland's population emigrated to areas including Britain, the United States, Canada, Argentina, Australia, and New Zealand.

The size of the Irish diaspora is demonstrated by the number of people around the world who claim Irish ancestry; some sources put the figure at 80 to 100 million.

Remember Ireland's population was 50% higher in the 1800's than it is now, despite the increase with migrants.

From the 1860s, the Circassian people, originally from Europe, were dispersed through Anatolia, Australia, the Balkans, the Levant, North America, and West Europe, leaving less than 10% of their population in the homeland, parts of historical Circassia in the modern-day Russian portion of the Caucasus.

Circassia is just North of Georgia and has an interesting history.

However, following the outbreak of the Russo-Circassian War 1763–1864, the Russian Empire did not recognize Circassia as an independent nation and instead treated it as Russian land under rebel occupation, despite having no control or ownership over the region.

Russian generals often referred to the Circassians as "mountaineers", "bandits", and "mountain scum" rather than by their ethnonym.

It was said the 90% of the Circassians were killed or exiled.

All of which sounds like Ukraine to me.

Former Rus lands taken over by a hostile race and murder and genocide ensues.

The Scottish Diaspora includes large populations of Highlanders moving to the United States and Canada after the Highland Clearances; as well as the Lowlanders, becoming the Ulster Scots in Ireland and the Scotch-Irish in America.

Never call a Scotsman scotch, they get very annoyed, they have a tendency to headbutt people and state a scotch is a drink not a person.

There were two major Italian diasporas in Italian history.

The first diaspora began around 1880, two decades after the Unification of Italy, and ended in the 1920s to the early 1940s with the rise of Fascist Italy.

Poverty was the main reason for emigration, specifically the lack of land as mezzadria sharecropping flourished in Italy, especially in the South, and property became subdivided over generations.

Especially in Southern Italy, conditions were harsh.

Until the 1860s to 1950s, most of Italy was a rural society with many small towns and cities and almost no modern industry in which land management practices, especially in the South and the Northeast, did not easily convince farmers to stay on the land and to work the soil.

Another factor was related to the overpopulation of Southern Italy as a result of the improvements in socioeconomic conditions after Unification.

That created a demographic boom and forced the new generations to emigrate en masse in the late 19th century and the early 20th century, mostly to the Americas.

Probably to create the Italian Mafia which then rose up in America, although the same could be said about the Irish Mafia that rose up in Boston.

The new migration of capital created millions of unskilled jobs around the world and was responsible for the simultaneous mass migration of Italians searching for work and bread.

The second diaspora started after the end of World War II and concluded roughly in the 1970s.

Between 1880 and 1980, about 15,000,000 Italians left the country permanently.

By 1980, it was estimated that about 25,000,000 Italians were residing outside Italy.

So as we have defined, a diaspora is not just Jewish related but a global phenomenon.

A mass migration program that took place over the last 300 hundred years in particular and largely sent to the Americas, long before the Soros Foundation and others created similar conditions to repeat the program.

As stated earlier, the Jews are not a diaspora prior to the creation of the fake State in 1948 as they had no land previously, all of which is reminiscent of the Hyksos group from the Cosmic Genetics series.

SCIENCE SECTION:

[Text by Thomas Williams is in bold]

Here is another interesting scientist thinking process, that can inspire a deeper thinking pattern and some different conclusions from what they consider the normal.

Or does it prove how out of touch science is with life?

The report said:

What if everything in our world has a soul and mind? What if every desk, chair, and potted plant has a conscious stream of thoughts?

That's the basic idea behind Panpsychism, a theory first put forward in the late 16th century by Francesco Patrizi.

It's been a hundred years or so since science won out about this theory in the 1920s, but now it's regaining momentum.

To understand why this theory is regaining popularity requires us to look at one of the most difficult conundrums that human scientists have ever faced: where consciousness comes from.

Scientists have been trying to solve this hard problem for over a hundred years, and while developments in neuroscience, psychology, and quantum physics have come far, we still don't have a definitive answer.

The reason why is the thinking process is wrong, plus they operate in a department of study that is heavily controlled and will never allow too much of the truth to be revealed.

It fairly boggles my mind that they are still asking this type of question though, again it plays into the what is series.

That was done because too few understand the basic concepts of life and living.

The argument is regaining momentum, though, thanks in part to the work of Italian neuroscientist and psychiatrist Giulio Tononi, who proposed the idea that there is widespread consciousness even found in the simplest of systems.

Tononi and American neuroscientist Christof Koch argued that consciousness will follow where there are organized lumps of matter.

Some even believe that the stars may be conscious.

This basic idea, then, seems to suggest that grouped lumps of matter, like the very chair you're sitting in right now, may have a stream of consciousness.

Of course, not everyone agrees with this.

Many still take the stance that this is just an attempt to grasp at straws, if you will, in a bid to understand consciousness and how it comes to be.

These are like the vegan people who didn't believe plants were living things with consciousness.

They experience pain, emotions and can recognize when changes in the weather can affect their environment and then make changes to accommodate it.

The main idea behind Panpsychism seems to rely on the belief that if brains are not required for consciousness, then anything can be conscious of its existence, and thus, everything has different experiences.

Yes, but why have they not gone on to understanding the heart and the role it plays in life, multiple lives and soul development?

But there are more than just the believers and unbelievers here.

There are actually some who believe that consciousness is all an illusion, which raises even more questions.

How are those people existing to create those thoughts if they don't believe in consciousness? The sheer concept of that belief system is utter lunacy.

Keith Frankish, an honorary professor of philosophy at the University of Sheffield, told Popular Mechanics that he believes that consciousness is just an illusion of our own minds.

Frankish by name and Frankish by nature it seems.

Like I have said there are no experts on this planet, just a group of idiots spouting ridiculous drivel whilst collecting worthless pieces of paper, that people believe are valid, when they are clearly not.

How can you be a professor of philosophy and deny consciousness? What is worse is, people seek out these PHD and Master papers people for their opinion, again utter lunacy.

Whether or not the very stars are conscious has yet to be proven, of course.

Science may think that way, I personally know they are part of the consciousness field, despite me having no training or papers on the subject.

Question for those people, how can the sun or star be the life giver, if it doesn't have any consciousness? I know, too much common sense again.

And we're still a long way from understanding the brain and how it correlates to different things within our world.

That is because we don't use it enough or anywhere near our full capacity.

Schools, Colleges, Universities and Media controls the minimal use of the brain and its thinking, whilst people are too lazy to think for themselves outside of the controlled box of pure nonsense.

This is still an area of science that draws a lot of big question marks from scientists.

All you can really say for sure is what you believe.

Are you conscious? Or is consciousness just an illusion that your brain has conjured up? It is certainly an interesting thought.

But it is not an interesting thought at all, it shows the levels of stupidity on this planet.

Because if you can pose the question is consciousness just an illusion, it means you are conscious, but actually very limited in your understanding of life.

Despite consciousness being the center of studies and discussions for years, it remains one of the world's biggest mysteries.

A new mind-boggling theory has suggested the brain's consciousness could derive from other dimensions, not just brain activity.

How is that considered new? It is pleasing they are finally beginning to ask these questions, but I am floored as to how so called intelligent people have debated this for so long.

Michael Pravica, a professor of physics at the University of Nevada, shared a concept deep-rooted in hyper dimensionality, the idea that the universe has more dimensions than the ones we perceive.

Oh dear, again the limiting factors, that one aspires to when becoming a scientist.

They just have not pushed the boundaries of life at all, just as the EBE said: your science has not evolved in the last 500 years.

He believes we should be exploring hidden dimensions to explain consciousness.

The dimensions are not hidden, we experience them in different ways during the day and the sleep time.

What we are failing to recognize is, we are in different dimensions at different times of the day.

He then said: The sheer fact we can conceive of higher dimensions than four within our mind, within our mathematics, is a gift.

It's something that transcends biology, the scientist told Popular Mechanics.

Why are they limiting it again with 4? that is the space and mechanics, not the actual physical or non-physical dimensions.

While hyper dimensionality and string theory are widely accepted by physicists, his belief of their ties to consciousness is a controversial one.

But the string theory is flawed, it doesn't work upon basic observational skillsets, only fake maths supplied to us by the system.

As an example of pi.

Pi is based on an assumption that they know the correct numbers, as the number π is a mathematical constant that is the ratio of a circle's circumference to its diameter, approximately equal to 3.14159.

What if the circles circumference is wrong, when compared to its diameter?

For that reason alone, pi must be considered as one of their shoehorned in math equations. $3.14 = 8$ not 9 is one basic observation.

To bring pi to $3.15 = 9$ it needs to add 0.00841 -the square root of which is 29, in a base 9 system that would read 32 in a nine based system.

3×9 is 27 giving the first number as a 3, with 2 over, giving you the number 32.

32 is also 2 in the base 16.

Are we basing the equation on their math of circumference and diameter? are they both deliberately flawed, making the equation wrong?

Because if you start off with the wrong process or figures, then you can never come to the right conclusion, which is what the system wants.

Pravica, an Orthodox Christian with a PhD from Harvard, used hyper dimensionality to create a bridge between science and his religious beliefs, exploring his idea that Jesus may have been a hyperdimensional being.

Exploring the idea? If their story about Jesus was factual, how can it be anything else?

According to the Bible, Jesus ascended into heaven 40 days after being on Earth.

How do you ascend into heaven if you're a four-dimensional creature? Pravica asked.

Oh dear, did he really just say that?

Let us look at their theories and descriptions of 3 and 4D.

In the familiar three-dimensional space of daily life, there are three coordinate axes—usually labeled x , y , and z , with each axis orthogonal or perpendicular to the other two.

The six cardinal directions in this space can be called up, down, east, west, north, and south.

Positions along these axes can be called altitude, longitude, and latitude.

Lengths measured along these axes can be called height, width, and depth.

Comparatively, four-dimensional space has an extra coordinate axis, orthogonal to the other three, which is usually labeled w .

To describe the two additional cardinal directions, Charles Howard Hinton coined the terms ana and kata, from the Greek words meaning "up toward" and "down from", respectively.

They are basing it upon up, down, sideways or across in physical movements, not as it should be with frequencies.

That to me is a serious flaw, it is also a limitation program as people don't just move in straight lines along the six cardinal directions.

Again the six cardinal directions imposes limitations as you can move 360 degrees plus up down, not just six.

So why do they only impose 6 directional points if we are on a sphere?

What does the six points really represent? The Cube? A black one or otherwise.

More on that in a later show.

But they are all the directional spaces within a system and does not explain a being going from 3D to 4D or more.

Where the same directional spaces will apply within that realm.

The dimensions are of a stacked nature, where the higher one can bleed at times into the lower one.

This is evidenced by UFO's appearing and disappearing as they go up, they went into the next dimension which is stacked on top of the 3rd dimension.

If you live in the mountains and watch the birds closely, you will see them disappear and reappear as well, just watch them closely and you will see.

Like I have said, most of science can be easily understood by simple observation of nature, apply as above and so below as well as, as within and so without and much can be garnered.

His theory ventures outside the realm of neuroscience and into theoretical physics with one scientist slamming it as bordering on science fiction. Into theoretical physics? Oh dear again, this is how science stifles the knowledge and then their label for discrediting things is to dismiss it as science fiction.

But when you understand that for the most part, science fiction is fact and science fact is fiction then you begin the journey of self-discovery.

Stephen Holler, PhD, an associate professor of physics at Fordham University in New York, chimed in on the action, telling the publication: Gaps in scientific knowledge are attributed to divine intervention, rather than being seen as opportunities for further inquiry and understanding. Exactly, he is describing the limited and limitation program that science consumes as its daily staple. Critical thinking equals expansion and leads to further discoveries. But then when someone steps outside of the box within science, they are labeled a heretic and or lunatic and all the bots of science jumps upon them and alienates their opinions and research.

He went on to suggest it was a poor explanation mechanism that arguably stifles the inquisitive nature required for good science and teaches that it's not okay to say, I don't know.

Yes indeed and also refreshing to hear.

As that is another program of impossibility, that people think they should know everything.

That is the impossible and perfection program ran ostensibly by low self-worth people upon themselves, which then becomes a looping program of failure and perpetuates the cycle of their own low self-worth.

It is ok to say I don't know and also okay to say I was wrong, I made a mistake because then you are learning the lesson of expansion. When I say expansion I mean you will learn to think outside of the box, as knowing something within the controlled box has proven to be folly on our part.

What is inside the box is a limited program of knowledge, lies and half-truths.

What is outside the box are jewels for you to collect on your journey of discovery, not their journey of an unknown destination that when you get there, you find it doesn't exist.

Once you understand and embrace that, then real progress can be made.

Thankfully we at THI are grateful we have two scientist/mathematicians Michael and Kevin, who can overcome their limitation programs and provide insight and knowledge for us.

MYSTERY SECTION:

[Text by Thomas Williams is in bold]

This was sent to me by a member some time ago and I finally have gotten round to addressing it.

It does fit in well now with the timing of our recent FHSTOS Part 27 The Future World Part 1.

In essence the future has already arrived and is in the past, that show proved they were just taking it to another level.

Does Karma apply to soulless entities; is not death their Karma?

No karma, hence why they were created by dark overlords.

If they are executed, does that apply as negative Karma to all involved?

If they are executed by a soul based being then Karma will not apply, if it is classed as self-defense.

Better to ask the other soulless entities to execute them as part of their own punishment.

The reason the overlords want war is to get people to fall, hence the term soul dier.

Because if you kill someone else, your next lifetime will drop you down the scale of soul development.

Given most people are astral based beings, this then keeps them in the looped harvesting cycle.

If they are not executed, their incarceration for life will be an economic drain of no productive value.

There is no guarantee the jailers cannot be leveraged to help them escape; there is no guarantee even with pure-soul jailers that they cannot escape to continue their depredations, now with a vengeance.

Which is correct as there is no point in keeping soulless entities, they are only here to cause mischief and mayhem.

If they are stuffed into an SSP ship, as has been proposed, and shot out into the universe, there is no guarantee they will be killed even if the ship is sabotaged;

A sabotaged ship would make some feel their hands are clean, but remote execution out of sight is still execution; there is no guarantee Dark Forces would not intercept and rescue them, to insert them back onto this planet or to transfer them and their evil to another planet.

I agree with all of that, but why would they rescue them, when they can just produce more in a laboratory? These are lab created entities, they are not valued unless they are delivering what the Overlords want of them. And if exposed or caught, just like a Langley agent, they are deleted by the Overlords to protect their mission, due to them being compromised.

If they are incarcerated, their incapability to feel any form of empathy or remorse will leave them seething with ever-increasing wrath at being thwarted and would therefore taint the frequencies of the planet and the universe with their hatred and rage.

You are missing the point, these types of beings have no consciousness, they are a mechanical entity and mechanical entities do not carry emotion, empathy, remorse or rage is not in their tool box.

What these beings do is beyond the capacity of civilized rule of law to deal with, given their habit of destroying evidence and murdering witnesses, and given the fact that the court and policing systems are riddled with them.

They are acting the way they were created, ultimately we may have to delete them all. But more importantly delete the facilities that creates them and or stop whoever is bringing them to this planet.

Can the soulless ones be identified, to separate them from those who are leveraged or otherwise in need of Karmic rehabilitation?

Yes, by their actions mostly, but there is a scientific test to determine their status.

Are not the soulless ones those whose consciousness can be downloaded into a chip and transferred to another meat suit?

After all, without soul, they would be basically an AI with memory storage and patterns of thought and action easily transferred to a device.

Yes, but they were still created without emotions, so their consciousness is just non-genetic memory code.

Fry the code and you fry the entity.

On the other hand, would not a being with a soul-spirit package be too complex for a Consciousness download to a chip or similar device?

No it is not too complex and was developed millions of years back, but ultimately degrades every time they up and download.

On a personal level, I find myself unsure who and what I am.

I have no idea whether I am truly white, sub-grey, or something else.

Are the people I have assumed were my parents really my parents and my siblings really my relations? I do not know.

And I am not even sure whether I need to know, whether it matters.

And if it does matter, how would I find out for sure?

Why do you need to find out the labels they gave to us and we adopted and adapted to?

They operate to confuse and disorient us, why would we add to it?

The parents created the meatsuit, not the soul, so why the concern about the connection between “family members”?

Let it go, you are a crown of creation, your parents are but temporary guardians until you reach adulthood.

But I wonder: If I intend it, can I change my genetics, my genetic blueprint, to be pure white?

Can any of us choose and intend such a change?

No, unless the original was the White race, but via mating you can attain the 16 energon channels, but cannot go beyond the 16 channels like the white race can.

Be satisfied with what you have, which is life and an experience here.

One can still develop much regardless of your genetics.

Can we change our blueprint to be the best of all genetic sub-species within our makeup, even if we do not know what those are?

What would that do to the channels of energon?

Surely it is best to focus on what you have than trying to be something else, you may find you are that someone else all along.

So changing it will then negate what you are.

Can we heal our ancestral line?

All organic people should heal their ancestral line.

The shows are to show the truth, not to create fear and or inadequacy.

Labels are their game, it doesn't have to be ours.

We must embrace the experience and learn from it.

There was a debate in the chat and how people felt that the Alpha personality is closer to the Sigma than the Beta. That from an observer viewpoint, reveals more are Alpha in nature than they care to admit, than Beta. But the path to Sigma is easier from the Beta than the Alpha despite what many people think. A beta just has to trust and believe in themselves and then grow. They retained themselves, but they just didn't bloom due to feeling downtrodden and lack of self-worth. A Sigma knows their self-worth, as they have mastered the Alpha and Beta aspects of themselves that they carried around with them. An Alpha like the left hand path of the N has to unlearn their false personas, find themselves, remove the desire to dominate over others, drop ego, learn cooperation, learn humility, correct low self-worth and then learn to grow. The Alpha rejected themselves in favor of a persona. The desire to be someone or somebody else, hence unlike the Beta, they are not even themselves.

Following on from the Christopher Columbus the Sephardic Jew finding America in 1492 recently. I was looking for certain details to do with slavery in America and came upon some remarkable statistics from just the 1790 census. I want to point out I am not making the case that there were no black slaves, there clearly were, but not on the scale his story reveals. The amount of white slavery superseded that of the blacks as evidenced by the census' of the 17/18 and 1900's. Here is the stark reality, all people ferried across the Atlantic to the Americas, were all slaves, except a certain group of people. They were the money people that became crystal clear from the 1790 census. The total population of America then was only 3.9M, except they never counted the natives on the census before or after the "Europeans" arrived.

Much has been made of the African slave trade coming to America via white ships, as told by their version of his story. But Part 4 of FHSTOS revealed the fact that all the slave ships were Jewish. Part 9 revealed in the around 1900 census, there just wasn't that many blacks counted in the report. Moreover there was no reference as to any Jewish being counted amongst the census either? Why would that be the case, that the great Israel and their chosen ones would be left out of a census? Was it to cover something up? The 1790 census had only a few categories of the total population of America. White males above 16, white males below 16, white females, other persons who are free, without giving an explanation as to who they are and the final category of slaves. No reference to the color or origin of the said slaves. Out of a population of 3.9M, 695K were deemed as slaves so around 17% were deemed as slaves at the time. We are told to presume that all 695K were black, yet we have seen countless times the slave ships contained a load of Irish children, plus mainly Eastern European peoples. Given the population of America peoples from the census was ranging from 80-89% white, it was they who made up the bulk of the slaves. How do I make that conclusion? Because as I said previously everyone that was brought here was a slave, whether by name or not. They were brought here like the Jewish settlement people to establish land away from the natives, under the illusion of the promise of riches and the great promised land of America. People have to grasp and understand that, that the majority moved to America were actual slaves. They were also unpaid soldiers as they had to fight against the native tribes, I bet they were not told that before they left Europe or the African continent.

America was built on the back of slaves and they were tasked to build a new empire on behalf of two groups. One the Jewish and two The House of Orange, which is also a Jewish group. Looking through the 1790 census, it told you who owned the slaves. The names will be all too familiar, Levi, Samuel, Benjamin, Aaron, Jacob and many other similar Jewish names. The second group who owned the slaves was largely the Dutch, and the third group was British names who owned less slaves than the previous two. The common denominator of all three groups was the East and West Indies Tea Company, which is the Dutch and eventually the British Empire crew, all under the banner of The House of Orange. Which originally was a House of Jewish EL-ites based in France, that moved to Holland and eventually went onto creating Belgium. It also went onto claiming South Africa, India, Australia, New Zealand and many islands in between.

ENDING PIECE:

This coming Saturday there is an open zoom for all members to listen to Kevin's next part of his presentation 6A. It will start at 12 noon MT which is 7pm in the UK. Looking forward to seeing you all there again.

Final piece tonight is from the world of politics and a possible interesting change of policy being made. Robert F. Kennedy Jr. is working to crowdsource names for the more than 4,000 appointees under the second upcoming Trump administration. Kennedy, a former environmental lawyer and anti-vaccine crusader, launched a website that asks the public to submit names of candidates who might be qualified for positions in environmental, energy, agriculture, labor policies and beyond.

Is this then potential a government for and by the people? Mr. Kennedy was sent The Blueprint book.

My own personal feelings are:

How about a policy committee, as all policies are failing.

The whole government needs to be ripped up and started again, everything else is a band aid that will ultimately fail anyway.

The position needs an enlightened dictator with full executive powers to change the whole landscape to just for and by the people.

Those in positions currently will just debate and debate and will never come to a decision, due to lobbyists, MIC, SSP and the Israeli problem.

If we truly wish to change America, then the above with the Blueprint will do that.

But first people have to accept the America you thought you knew was based upon illusion.

The dream was the nightmare and no matter how much people convince themselves otherwise, it is what it is.

The Blueprint brings the radical change required with massive doses of reality.

Organic v inorganic, real v illusion, living v bots, need v greed, cooperative v comparative and competitive, thriving people v slavery suits, abundances of the basic v scarcity, peace v war and the triumph of love over fear.

The latter of those words all created the void, it is up to us to manifest things and fill the void.

All it takes is application, an injection of soul/spirit driven forward by your own life force energy.

Energy cannot be destroyed, only reformatted into something different.

How different is dependent upon you and us all.

Out of adversity has come strength, despair has given way to defiance, and where it can take us all now is an alluring thought.

With the mirrors all up and projecting everywhere now, I guess we will see for the first time if we're evil or divine.
